a. In General

The general rules governing the form and sufficiency of verdicts or findings in civil actions, and their responsiveness to the pleadings, issues, and evidence, apply in actions for injuries arising out of the operation of motor vehicles.

General rules control as to the form and sufficiency of the verdict⁷⁹ or findings by the jury or trial court⁸⁰ in actions for injuries occasioned by the operation of motor vehicles. The verdict or findings should be definite and certain;⁸¹ and they should be responsive to, and supported by, the pleadings,⁸² issues,⁸³ and evidence.⁸⁴ A verdict is not necessarily void simply because the jury has returned a special verdict separating the expenses from the other items of damages.⁸⁵

The usual rules prevail as to the propriety and necessity of the submission of special issues⁸⁶ and as to the necessity of findings on special issues submitted.⁸⁷ In an action by a guest against his host, if the host's conduct with respect to control of the vehicle was negligent, a finding which would determine whether such negligence was the result of a lack of skill or judgment on the one hand, or of inadvertence on the other, may be essential.⁸⁸

Requests for rulings or special findings. The general rules as to special findings prevail with respect to the accuracy,⁸⁹ form,⁹⁰ and conformity to issues⁹¹ of requests for such findings. It may be proper for the trial court, under the circumstances of the case, to refuse particular requests for find-

Verdict for plaintiff for "no" damages

A verdict which states that it is in favor of plaintiff, but for "no" damages, is uncertain; it is not in favor of defendant, and its assessment of "no" damages nullifies its effect as a verdict in favor of plaintiff; and such a verdict is not rendered valid by the fact that contributory negligence was one of the defenses in the case.—Klein v. Miller, supra.

Ground of negligence

ings or rulings.⁹³ Thus the refusal of a requested ruling has been held not error where the application of such ruling to the facts of the case is not clear.⁹³ The failure to submit to the jury a question so framed as to elicit a finding on the crucial issue of whether a host breached any duty he owed to his guest has been held error even though no request was made to submit to the jury a question to produce a finding on the host-guest relationship.⁹⁴

b. Construction, Operation, and Effect

The construction, operation, and effect of verdicts or findings in actions for injuries arising out of the operation of motor vehicles are governed by the usual rules applicable in civil actions.

The general rules as to the construction, operation, and effect of verdicts or findings have been applied in actions for injuries arising out of the operation of motor vehicles.⁹⁵ The verdict or findings may be construed in connection with the instructions to the jury,⁹⁶ and should be construed broadly in support of the judgment.⁹⁷ A general verdict or finding for plaintiff ordinarily imports that he exercised due care under the circumstances,⁹⁸ that defendant or one for whose actions he is responsible was negligent,⁹⁹ and that such negligence caused the accident.¹ A finding of gross negligence² or willful and wanton misconduct³ on the part of defendant may establish, or be equivalent to a finding of, negligence on his part. A verdict of no cause of action for defendant on his counterclaim means that defendant was guilty of contributory negligence, where under the testi-

Proximate cause

The refusal of the trial court to rule that, if the state of the proof renders it impossible to determine which of two independent acts was the proximate cause of the injuries, then plaintiff has failed to sustain the burden of proof, was held not error where it was evident from other rulings that the court did not find that the acts involved were independent of each other as causes—Morrison v Medaglia, 191 N.E. 133, 287 Mass. 46.

Verdict as based on respondent superior

Where the jury could have imposed liability on the owner of the vehicle either under the doctrine of respondent superior or under a statute limiting liability to a specified amount, and the verdict is for a larger sum than the statutory amount, the jury will be held to have returned its verdict under the doctrine of respondent superior—Daniel v. Jones, 35 P.2d 198, 140 Cal App. 145.

Driver as servant of owner or hirer

Where the owner of a motor vehicle is sued jointly with the hirer thereof for personal injuries resulting from the negligence of the driver, a verdict finding that the driver was the servant of the hirer, and also finding in favor of the owner, was held to mean that the driver was not the servant of the owner.—Gorman v. A. R. Jackson Kansas City Showcase Works Co., Mo.App., 19 S.W.2d 559.

Truth of allegations of answer

A finding that all the allegations of a particular paragraph in defendant's answer were not true was held not equivalent to a finding that some of the allegations were true, where the paragraph stated a single affirmative defense of contributory negligence.—Hicks v. Reis, 134 P.2d 788, 21 Cal.2d 654.

Status as passenger

Where there was testimony from which jury might infer that deceased was in automobile by invitation, or as a passenger, and trial court submitted question with instruction that if he was, the driver's contributory negligence would not affect administrator's recovery, and where jury found for plaintiff, there was a legal inference that they must have found that deceased was a passenger.—Tronto v. New and independent cause

Where acts of a third person were claimed by defendant to have constituted a new and independent cause, a verdict for plaintiff was equivalent to a finding against defendant on such defense.—Baker v. Corse, Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 817, error dismissed.

mony in the case it could not mean that the jury considered neither party to have been negligent.⁴

A verdict or finding that defendant was not negligent renders immaterial the issue of contributory negligence⁵ and the legal status of injured occupants of a vehicle involved in the accident;⁶ and it precludes a recovery by an injured child's parent for expenses incurred in treating the injuries. Further, where the jury has found defendant guilty of negligence, but has also found plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence, plaintiff cannot recover, since the finding of contributory negligence renders immaterial all findings of primary negligence on the part of defendant.⁷ A statement in the findings of fact of the trial court that the court is unable to find that plaintiff's negligence was a contributing cause of the collision is in effect a statement that he is in doubt on the issue, and such a negative finding is not a finding that plaintiff was free from fault.⁸

In accordance with the general rules governing the construction, operation, and effect of verdicts or findings, particular verdicts or findings have been construed or held to authorize or support a recovery by plaintiff, or not to authorize judgment against him, or not to require a judgment for defendant;⁹ to justify or require a judgment for defendant, or not to authorize a recovery by plaintiff;¹⁰ to justify judgment against cross claimants;¹¹ to establish the existence of, or not to establish the freedom from, negligence of a defendant or a driver for whose actions defendant was liable;¹² to establish freedom from, or not to establish the existence of, causal negligence of a particular defendant or a person for whose actions defendant was responsible;¹³ to establish that de-

Proximate cause

Finding of jury that certain acts of plaintiff in automobile collision case constituted contributory negligence as defined in charge was finding that such acts were proximate causes of plaintiff's injuries, where proximate cause was essential element of contributory negligence as defined in charge, so as to require rendition of judgment for defendant.—*Southland-Greyhound Lines v. fendant was¹⁴ or was not¹⁵ guilty of gross negligence; to establish that a driver was guilty of reckless and wanton misconduct;¹⁶ to establish that a driver was acting within the scope of his employment;¹⁷ to establish the existence, or not to establish the absence, of contributory negligence on the part of the injured person;¹⁸ or to establish freedom from, or not to establish the existence of, contributory negligence on the part of the injured person.¹⁹

Individual and joint verdict. It has been held that when a verdict is returned against the driver, and an amount is also assessed against the driver and owner, the verdict may be termed to be individual and joint.²⁰

c. Consistency

- (1) In general
- (2) As to several defendants

(1) In General

Special verdicts or findings should not be conflicting or inconsistent with each other or with a general verdict or finding; and under the practice in some jurisdictions special findings control in the event of irreconcilable conflict between them and a general verdict.

control,²³ and the special findings may, for example, entitle defendant to a judgment notwithstanding a general verdict for plaintiff;²⁴ but under some circumstances a finding of the jury in answer to a special interrogatory may not control a general verdict.²⁵

Findings of ultimate facts may be controlling over merely evidentiary findings or probative facts which, although inconsistent therewith, are not shown to be the only facts furnishing the basis for the ultimate facts;²⁶ and in some cases the conclusions or findings of ultimate facts have been held not inconsistent with subsidiary facts found.²⁷ A finding absolving a driver from negligence in one respect does not necessarily preclude finding him otherwise negligent;²⁸ and the fact that the jury, in answer to a special question on what negligence it based its verdict, gave a particular answer which, standing alone, would absolve defendant, does not preclude reliance by plaintiff on another ground of negligence alleged in the petition and fairly included in an answer to other special questions submitted.²⁹

Negligence and willful misconduct. A finding that the driver of a motor vehicle was guilty of negligence and willful misconduct is not necessarily inconsistent where the evidence supports the finding of willful misconduct and the finding of negligence can be treated as surplusage.³⁰

In case of several plaintiffs, findings in behalf of some and not of others are not necessarily inconsistent.³¹ However, in an action brought by the owner of a motor vehicle for property damage and a passenger therein for personal injuries against other vehicles involved in a collision, a verdict against the injured passenger was held inconsistent with a verdict in favor of the owner of the vehicle in which the passenger was riding.³²

Finding for or against both parties. Where a counterclaim, cross complaint, or the like is filed, a verdict or finding is not inconsistent which finds for defendant on the complaint and for plaintiff on defendant's claim, where there is evidence from which the jury might find that the collision was due to an accident or that both parties were negligent.³³ However, a verdict in favor of plaintiff against defendant for plaintiff's damages is inconsistent with a verdict in favor of defendant against plaintiff for defendant's damages.³⁴

Speed

Where the jury have found that the operator of a motor vehicle was driving in excess of a certain speed in violation of statute, which violation constituted negligence per se, the court may properly ignore a general finding that the operator was not driving faster than a person of ordinary care and prudence would have driven under the same or similar circumstances—Greaser v. Coca-Cola Bottling Works of Dallas, Tex. Civ.App., 98 S.W.2d 1028, error dismissed.

Finding held not general

Jury's negative answer to special question whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, as defined in court's instructions, was held not general finding, and hence did not yield to jury's detailed findings, in answer to other questions, that accident would not have occurred had plaintiff alighted on right side and that he should have done so in exercise of due care.—Schroeder v. Nelson, 139 P.2d 868, 157 Kan. 320.

(2) As to Several Defendants

While in some cases a verdict may allow a recovery against one defendant and exonerate another, the general rule is that an owner or employer whose liability can arise only by virtue of the negligence of the driver cannot be held liable where the verdict is in favor of the driver.

In an action against several defendants, where the pleading and evidence warrant it, a verdict may be rendered in favor of plaintiff as against one or more defendants and in favor of the other defendants as against plaintiff.³⁵ Thus, in an action brought by an injured person against the owners or operators of two vehicles involved in a collision, the exoneration of the owner or operator of one of the vehicles is not inconsistent with a finding of liability on the part of the owner or operator of the other vehicle.³⁶ A finding of negligence on the part of all defendants in an action against the owners or operators of two vehicles may be improper where defendants have offered two distinct versions of the accident which cannot be reconciled with each other.³⁷

Failure to hold driver liable. As a general rule, the owner of the vehicle or the employer of the driver cannot be held liable in an action based solely on the negligence of the driver where the finding is in favor of the driver.³⁸ According to some authorities, where the action is against the driver and his employer, a verdict against the employer only, which is silent as to the driver, is equivalent to a verdict in favor of the driver, and hence cannot stand;³⁹ but other authorities hold that, in an action against the driver and his employer, a verdict against the employer only is not a verdict in favor of the driver, but merely indicates a failure to find on the issue of the driver's negligence,⁴⁰ and hence that a verdict against the owner, which is silent as to the driver, is not void.⁴¹ Likewise, it has been held that, where liability is sought to be imposed on a parent under a statute making a parent who signs the application for a license for his minor child liable for the negligence of the minor, a verdict which is against the parent only, and which is silent concerning the liability of the child, may be upheld.⁴²

The employer or owner may be held liable, and the driver exonerated, where the owner or employer was a joint tort-feasor or guilty of personal negligence⁴³ or where his liability is not based solely on the negligence of the exonerated driver

N.J.—Feury v. Reid Ice Cream Co., 126 A. 462, 2 N.J. Misc. 1008.

Absence of issue as to owner's negligence

Verdict holding owner liable while exonerating driver could not be sustained on ground that owner was negligent, independently of any act or omission of driver, in that truck was overloaded and equipped with insufficient brakes, where such negligence was neither pleaded nor proved

but on the negligence of some other person for whose actions he is responsible.⁴⁴ Thus, where a plaintiff has based his claim on the driver's negligence and also on the ground that the lights of the vehicle were not in working order, a verdict against the employer only is not invalid, since the jury could have found that the accident was caused not by any negligence of the driver but by that of the employer in not having the lights in working condition,⁴⁵ although in such a case the employer has a right to ascertain from the jury whether the verdict was based on the driving or the lights, since if it was based on the driving the employer would have a right of recovery over against the driver.⁴⁶ In an action against the operator of a motor vehicle and the owner thereof, whose agent was teaching the operator how to drive, a finding that the operator was not negligent in attempting to operate the vehicle does not imply a finding that the instructor was not negligent in permitting an inexperienced driver to operate on a busy street;⁴⁷ and a finding that the inexperienced operator was not negligent in attempting to operate the vehicle does not imply a finding that he operated the vehicle with due care, with respect to the liability of the owner;⁴⁸ hence a verdict for the inexperienced operator is not inconsistent with a verdict against the owner.⁴⁹

The inconsistency in a verdict holding the owner liable while exonerating the driver has been held not to affect the propriety of the jury's finding in favor of the owner of another vehicle involved in the accident.⁵⁰ The owner cannot complain of a verdict which, although expressly finding the driver negligent, awards damages against the owner only, the error in such case being one of which plaintiff alone may complain.⁵¹

Holding driver but not general master. A verdict against the driver, but in favor of the driver's general master, is not void as contradictory where there is evidence that the general master had hired the vehicle and driver to a third person and that the driver was subject to the complete control of the hirer at the time of the accident.⁵²

Exoneration of vehicle. Where, in an action against the owner of the vehicle, the alleged offending vehicle was itself made a party defendant under statute, a verdict exonerating the vehicle was held not to preclude recovery against the owner, the action against the vehicle being in rem and merely affording an additional remedy for collection of the judgment.⁵³

Amount as against each defendant. In an action brought against the operator of a vehicle and another person, the liability of such other person being predicated solely on the negligence of the driver and the status of such other person as the owner of the vehicle or the employer of the driver, a verdict against defendants should be for the same sum,⁵⁴ and a verdict against the owner or employer for a larger sum than against the driver is improper.⁵⁵ Likewise, in an action by a passenger against the owners or operators of two vehicles involved in an accident, a verdict against defendants ordinarily should be a single verdict against both for such sum as the more culpable ought to pay.⁵⁶ Where the jury has assessed damages against both the owner and the driver in a specified total sum, an arbitrary division thereof by the jury, assessing damages separately against each defendant, is not in accordance with the law, but is mere surplusage which the trial court should refuse to effectuate.⁵⁷ A stipulation that the jury shall find whether defendants shall be held jointly liable or whether only one shall be held liable does not permit the jury to render separate verdicts in different amounts against two defendants.⁵⁸

Taxi engaged by employee

Where an employee on instructions from his employer engaged a taxi, and told the taxi driver to drive at a rapid rate, a verdict in favor of the taxi driver was held not to preclude a verdict against the employer, since plaintiff did not rely solely on the negligence of the taxi driver but also claimed negligence of the employee.—*Southern Kansas Stage Lines Co. v. § 559. Judgment, Review, and Costs

The general rules governing judgments in civil actions apply in actions for injuries arising out of the operation of motor vehicles. The successful party ordinarily is entitled to costs.

The general rules governing judgments in civil actions have been applied in actions for injuries arising out of the operation of motor vehicles.⁵⁹ In an action brought against both the driver and the owner of a motor vehicle, where the jury have found that the driver was guilty of gross negligence, but have made no such finding as to the owner, the judgment should not include a statement that the owner was guilty of gross negligence.⁶⁰ In the absence of evidence rebutting a statutory presumption that a wife in driving a motor vehicle owned by her husband was acting as his agent, a judgment in favor of a guest injured in an accident should run against both the husband and wife.⁶¹

As to damages. Where, in an action against each of two motorists, who contributed to the injury, a verdict is entered for plaintiff in each case, a judgment may be rendered against each defendant for the full amount of the damages.⁶² In an action wherein liability is established against both the owner and the operator of a motor vehicle, the judgment against the operator should be for the full amount of the damages sustained,⁶³ and a judgment cannot stand where its effect would be to permit a recovery against the owner in addition to, and in excess of, the amount awarded against the operator.⁶⁴ Under a statute limiting the amount for which the owner of a motor vehicle can be held liable where his vehicle was operated by another, an owner against whom a verdict has been rendered for an amount in excess of the statutory limit is entitled to have the judgment thereon limited, as against him, to the statutory amount.⁶⁵ Where the court is permitted by statute to allow double or treble damages where the sole cause of the injury is a violation of the "law of the road," and the complaint in the action alleges also other causes or grounds of injury and a general verdict is rendered for plaintiff, without a showing that the verdict was based on a violation of such law, the court cannot render a judgment for double or treble damages.⁶⁶

Recourse against operator's property first. Under some statutes, where an injured person recovers a judgment against both the operator of a motor vehicle and the owner thereof, it is sometimes required that, in satisfying the judgment, recourse be had first against the property of the operator;⁶⁷ and under such a statute the judgment creditor may not, by means of a writ of execution, first have access or resort to the automobile owner's property as a source of help or supply, or as an expedient means for attaining the desired end of satisfying the judgment.⁶⁸

Review. The principles governing the review of actions for injuries arising out of the operation of motor vehicles are considered in Appeal and Error.

Costs. As in other actions for damages, the judgment ordinarily,⁶⁹ although not invariably,⁷⁰ carries with it costs in favor of the successful party. In an action brought by the owner and by a passenger, in which the passenger was found entitled to recover, but the owner was not, thus in-

70. Decision overruling prior rule

Where verdict exonerating motorist from liability for death of guest passenger in another automobile on ground that negligence of driver of such automobile was imputable to passenger was directed before rendition of supreme court decision overruling prior rule as to imputed negligence and motorist did not contest appeal from judgment entered on such verdict, it was held that no costs would be allowed in either trial or supreme court to either plaintiff or defendant.—Herman v. Metal Office Furniture Co., 26 N.W.2d 752, 317 Mich. 185.

dicating that both drivers involved in the accident were negligent, defendants were held not entitled to costs.⁷¹

§ 560. Damages

- a. In general
- b. Exemplary or punitive damages

a. In General

Recovery for injuries arising out of the operation of a motor vehicle ordinarily should be for such amount as will justly compensate the injured person. The statutory liability imposed in certain cases on the owner of a vehicle or the parent or guardian of a minor driver is sometimes limited to a specified amount.

The law furnishes no exact standard by which to measure the compensation to which a successful party is entitled in an action for injuries sustained in a motor vehicle accident.⁷² Ordinarily, and in the absence of any question of exemplary damages, the damages allowable are such as will justly compensate the parties for the injuries sustained,⁷³ and no more.⁷⁴

Statutory limitation of liability. Under some statutes the owner of a motor vehicle driven with his permission or consent, but not in his employment or business, can be held liable for no more than the amounts set forth in the statutes;⁷⁵ and some statutes imposing liability for a minor's negligence on the parent or guardian who signed the minor's application for a license likewise limit the liability of the parent or guardian to specified amounts, at least where the minor was not operating the vehicle as a servant or agent of the parent or guardian.⁷⁶ Under such statutes, unless the verdict or judgment is in excess of the statutory limit, the liability of the owner is in the same amount as that of the operator.⁷⁷

Penalty. Under some statutory provisions the owner of a motor vehicle who is sought to be held liable for the negligence of a driver can be held liable for a penalty prescribed in the statute only if the injury resulted from the negligence of the driver while in charge of the vehicle as a driver, and not, for example, for an injury resulting from inadequate supervision, inspection, or repair of the vehicle by others.⁷⁸

b. Exemplary or Punitive Damages

In general, exemplary or punitive damages are not recoverable for ordinary negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle, although they may be awarded for wantonness, willfulness, or the like. There is some conflict as to the right to predicate punitive damages on the intoxication of a driver or his failure to stop after the accident as required by law.

In general, exemplary damages may not be recovered in a case involving an ordinary collision caused by negligence on a highway, in the absence of any intentional, malicious, or willful act.⁷⁹ In proper cases, however, punitive damages may be allowed as a means of enforcing the rules governing the use of the highways by the drivers of motor vehicles,⁸⁰ and such damages have been permitted for recklessness, wantonness, or willfulness on the part of the operator of a motor vehicle,⁸¹ and also for gross negligence.⁸²

Intoxication of driver. While some authorities have refused to permit an award of punitive damages to be predicated merely on the intoxication of the operator of a motor vehicle,⁸³ other authorities have upheld the right to recover punitive damages against an intoxicated driver.⁸⁴

Failure to stop after accident. It has been held that the conduct of a driver of a motor vehicle in failing to stop and give his name or to render assistance to the person injured after the accident, when taken in connection with all the circumstances, may authorize a finding of such an entire want of care, conscious indifference to consequences, and aggravating circumstances as will authorize a recovery of punitive damages.⁸⁵ However, a recovery of punitive damages has been held not allowable merely because of the failure of the operator of a motor vehicle to stop after the accident as required by statute, in the absence of any showing of wrongful motive or intent.⁸⁶

Liability of municipality. There is authority indicating that a municipality may be held liable for punitive or exemplary damages for injuries resulting from the operation of motor vehicles by its officers or employees;⁸⁷ but there is also authority denying such liability.⁸⁸

K. LIEN FOR DAMAGES CAUSED IN OPERATION

§ 561. In General

Under some statutes a claim for damages from the negligent operation of a motor vehicle is a lien thereon which, when judicially determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, dates back to the time of the injury.

Under some statutes, which have been held constitutional and valid,⁸⁹ a claim for damages resulting from the negligent operation of a motor vehicle is a lien on the vehicle,⁹⁰ the purpose of such a statute being to afford a sure remedy to the injured party in instances where the damage comes within the purview of the statute.⁹¹ Such a statute does not relieve the person whose negligence caused the injury of personal liability therefor⁹² or subject the owner to any personal liability merely because of his ownership;⁹³ but the lien

The lien exists only if there are present the essential elements prescribed in the statutes.⁹⁵ Depending on the terms of the statute, the lien may be limited to cases where the automobile was operated by the owner or with his consent⁹⁶ or may extend to all cases in which the car causes injury.⁹⁷ Under some statutes, before plaintiff is entitled to a lien, there must be a showing that the vehicle was being operated in excess of a prescribed speed limit and in willful violation of the statute.⁹⁸

Nature or character of lien. The lien is one of statutory creation;⁹⁹ it is of fortuitous origin, not arising out of contract or created in aid of in-

Right confined to injured person

Before amendment, the statute creating lien and right of attachment against motor vehicles for injury or damage done gave such right only to the person who received the injury, but no lien or right of action was given in favor of the father and mother or other beneficiaries under the terms of Lord Campbell's Act.—Hunter v. No extraterritorial effect

Statute is a police regulation, designed to promote the safety of inhabitants of the state, and was not intended to be given extraterritorial effect so as to be applicable where automobile was driven into another state and therein involved in an accident.—C. I. T. Corporation v. Guy, 195 S.E. 659, 170 Va. 16.

dustry or trade,¹ and liens created in favor of landlords, mechanics, agistors, and the like furnish no clear analogy since the injured person asserting the lien against the vehicle has contributed nothing to the value or security of the property subject to the lien.²

Time lien attaches. A judicial determination by a court of competent jurisdiction that the essential elements of the lien are present, with a fixing of the amount of damages by a final judgment of such court, is also a judicial determination that, under the statute, a lien on the offending vehicle came into existence and attached to the vehicle at the moment the injury was inflicted;³ in such case the whole world is put on notice, referable to the time of the accident, of the existence of such lien.⁴ In other words, when the existence and amount of the lien have been judicially determined and fixed by a final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, such lien dates back to the moment of the injury and attaches to the offending vehicle from that time.⁵

Vehicles owned and operated by governmental agencies. A statute imposing a lien on the vehicle, although couched in general terms, has been held not to include vehicles owned and operated by governmental agencies of the state for public purposes.⁶

Lien for damages to highway. Under some statutes a vehicle operated in violation of specified statutes is subject to a lien for the amount of damages caused by it to the highway,⁷ and the validity of such statutes has been upheld.⁸

§ 562. Priority

The priority of the lien with respect to other liens, or with respect to the rights of a bona fide purchaser of the vehicle, depends on the terms of the statute creating the lien.

The lien for damages resulting from the negligent operation of the motor vehicle does not take precedence over a prior contractual lien⁹ unless such is the clear intention of the statute.¹⁰ It may, however, be given priority over other liens.¹¹

Bona fide purchasers. Under some statutes the lien subsists and renders the vehicle subject to attachment, even though it has been sold to one who has no knowledge of the accident.¹² Under other statutes, which do not speak affirmatively with respect to the conflicting rights of the lienor and a bona fide purchaser of the vehicle, the rights of the purchaser acquired in good faith prior to institution of the suit to enforce the lien are held superior to the lien claimed by the injured person,¹³ although in such a case, where the owner has sold the vehicle to a bona fide purchaser after the accident, thus preventing the injured person from enforcing and satisfying his lien, the injured person may be entitled to recover from the owner the value of the lien.¹⁴

- b. Action as in rem or in personam

a. In General

A lien against a motor vehicle for damages arising out of its operation may, in the absence of statute providing otherwise, be foreclosed by a bill in equity. Under some statutes a person entitled to a lien may attach the vehicle.

Reason for rule

14. Tenn.—Rent-A-Car Co. v. Bel-ford, supra.

operation, it has been held that foreclosure of the lien should be by a bill in equity.¹⁵ Under a statute giving a lien for damages to the public highway, discussed supra § 561, it has been held that where the public authorities have acquired possession of the vehicle by voluntary act of the driver, and without any unlawful act on their part, they have a right to hold it for the lien.¹⁶

Under some statutes the person entitled to a lien on the vehicle is given a right to attach the vehicle,¹⁷ in which case the attachment may be made in the manner provided for attachments generally,¹⁸ except that, under some statutes creating the lien, it is not necessary to show one of the general grounds of attachment prescribed in the general attachment statutes, such as departure of defendant, or removal of property, from the state.¹⁹ However, an attachment is not necessary to create the lien,²⁰ the office of the attachment being merely to seize the property and place it in the custody of the court.²¹

Waiver or abandonment of attachment. The rendition of a personal judgment against defendant has been held not a waiver of the attachment.²² The fact that the trial court did not order the attached vehicle sold does not necessarily operate as an abandonment of the attachment.²³

Claim of homestead. The lien may be enforced

notwithstanding the owner's claim that the vehicle is part of his homestead.²⁴

b. Action as in Rem or in Personam

An action by one having a lien against a motor vehicle for damages may be maintained in rem against the vehicle, or in personam against those responsible for the damages, or jointly against the vehicle and the individuals.

Under statutes giving the injured person a lien and the right to attach the vehicle, such injured person has an action in rem against the vehicle.²⁵ He may maintain such an action in rem against the vehicle alone, without joining the owner or operator of the vehicle as a party defendant,²⁶ although in such case no personal judgment is recoverable.²⁷ The injured person is not precluded, however, from joining as a party defendant anyone responsible for the injury,²⁸ and he may proceed at the same time against the motor vehicle in rem and the motorist in personam,²⁹ although he is not obliged to bring a joint action against the owner and the vehicle,³⁰ but may bring an action solely in personam against the motorist.³¹

Venue. Under some statutes, the proceedings in rem against the vehicle may be instituted in the county in which the injury occurred and where the vehicle may be found;³² but, where the action is also brought against an owner or driver who resides in another county, the proper venue, in so far as the action is in personam against the individual defendant, is the county of defendant's residence.³³ One who has attached the vehicle and also joined defendants in person may waive any personal judgment and proceed in rem in the county where the accident happened and the attachment was made.³⁴

Failure to name vehicle in summons. Where an action is brought against the driver of the motor vehicle and the personal defendant is duly served with the summons and complaint, and the damage-feasant vehicle is seized under a warrant of attachment regularly issued, such a suit includes an action in rem against the vehicle, although the vehicle is not named as a party defendant in the summons,³⁵ particularly where such vehicle is named in the captions of the complaint and of the affidavits and bond on which the warrant of attachment was issued;³⁶ under such circumstances the jurisdiction of the damage-feasant motor vehicle is acquired by its seizure under the attachment proceedings.³⁷

IX. OTHER INJURIES TO MOTOR VEHICLES OR OCCUPANTS THEREIN

§ 564. In General

- a. In general
- b. Injuries from defects in private premises

a. In General

A municipality is not liable for injuries to motor vehicles or occupants thereof occasioned by the failure of its police officers to prevent such injuries, and a purchaser of a motor vehicle is generally not responsible for injuring the vehicle prior to purchase.

In accordance with the principle that a municipal corporation is not responsible for injuries to third persons caused by its police officers when acting in an official capacity, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Municipal Corporations § 775, also 43 C.J. p 964 note 50—p 967 note 67, a municipal corporation may not be held liable for failure of its police to prevent injury to a motorist from acts of third persons.³⁸ Where a prospective purchaser of a motor vehicle injures the car while learning to operate it under the guidance of the owner's agent, the law will not put the purchaser to the hazard of liability for such damage in the absence of positive negligence.³⁹

b. Injuries from Defects in Private Premises

An owner of private premises generally is not liable for injury to a motor vehicle or its occupant unless there is negligence or a breach of duty, but liability may accrue by reason of the maintenance of property adjacent to a public way in a defective or dangerous condition.

In the absence of a breach of duty or willful negligence, there is no liability for an injury to a motor vehicle or to its occupants from defects in private premises.⁴⁰ However, the general rule that owners of property abutting on, or adjacent to, highways or streets are liable for injuries on the private premises to passers-by arising from a defective or dangerous condition, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 77, also 45 C.J. p 859 notes 58–69, applies to a motorist injured on private premises adjacent to a highway or street,⁴¹ but the rule is applicable only when such premises are so closely adjacent that a traveler by a slight deviation might suffer injury.⁴²

Governmental function

A township is not liable for injuries to a driver of its truck on private premises while engaged in work involving a governmental function.—Casey v. Bridgewater Tp., Somerset County, 161 A. 603, 107 N.J.Law 163.

41. Kan.—Durst v. Wareham, 297 P. 675, 132 Kan. 785.

Guard rail or barrier

Unless an excavation has been made on the adjacent property by the owners, or unless they have created a dangerous condition, they have no legal obligation to maintain a guard rail or barrier at the lot line to protect travelers along the public way.—Kimball v. City of Sioux Falls, S.D., 20 N.W.2d 873.

Traveler is not a trespasser so as to prevent liability.—Durst v. Wareham, 297 P. 675, 132 Kan. 785.

42. Basis of liability is not the closeness of the danger on the private premises to the highway or street, but the danger to travelers on the public way.—Durst v. Wareham, supra.

Seventy-five feet

Where excavation on land, into which automobile fell, causing injury to occupants, was seventy-five feet from highway, county in possession of land during course of transforming it to park uses was not liable notwithstanding private road led from street.—Bennett v. City of Mt. Vernon, 276 N.Y.S. 205, 243 App. Div. 119.

The duty owed by the owner of the private premises to the traveler varies somewhat with the status of the traveler. In the case of a trespassing motorist, the only duty owed to him is to refrain from active negligence and willful injury,⁴³ but, where a former highway is acquired by private owners, a duty exists to warn all travelers in some appropriate and unmistakable manner that they have no right to proceed on such premises.⁴⁴ A motorist who is a mere licensee must take private premises as he finds them, and is not entitled to have the premises maintained in good condition.⁴⁵

Where the owner of private premises by invitation, express or implied, induces the use by motorists of a passageway over his premises, he is bound to use ordinary care to keep it safe for passage,⁴⁶ and liability attaches when an invitee is injured as a result of a breach of such duty.⁴⁷ While there is no duty to warn an invitee of apparent defects or obstructions,⁴⁸ a failure to give proper warning, when coupled with other negligence, constitutes a violation of duty.⁴⁹ While proper guard rails, signals, or barriers may be required as to invitees, there is no duty to furnish a rail or barrier sufficient against all contingencies,⁵⁰ and, where the proximate cause of the injury is the driving at illegal speed, rather than a defect in the guard rail, there is no liability.⁵¹

Contributory negligence. If carelessness of plaintiff causes or efficiently contributes to his injury, his contributory negligence bars his recovery,⁵² and, where the negligence of plaintiff is the sole or contributing cause of the injury, liability does not attach.⁵³ An invitee, however, is entitled to assume that the premises are free from dangerous obstructions.⁵⁴ The rule that an automobile driver is required to drive at night at such a rate of speed that he can stop within the distance within which his headlights will disclose objects ahead, as discussed supra § 293, has been held to be inapplicable to constitute contributory negligence on the part of a driver proceeding at night at slow speed on private premises.⁵⁵

Procedure. Under evidence showing that the injuries complained of were due to dangers on de-

Extent of warning

Common-law right of owner to per-

a. Liability

- (1) In general
- (2) Animals driven along public way
- (3) Injuries by dogs
- (4) Runaways
- (5) Contributory negligence

(1) In General

The owner or keeper of domestic animals permitted to be at large is not liable for injuries by such animals to motor vehicles or occupants thereof in the absence of negligence, violation of statute, or knowledge or notice of a vicious or mischievous propensity.

The general rule is that, in the absence of negligence, violation of regulatory provisions, or the presence of a vicious or mischievous propensity of which defendant has knowledge or notice, the owner of domestic animals permitted to be at large on a public way is not liable for injuries sustained by a motor vehicle or its occupants through a collision with such animals.⁶³ So, if some act on the mit animal on public highway see Animals § 107.

Liability generally for injuries by domestic animals see Animals § 145

American Law Institute Restatement, Torts

(1) The rule that "one who possesses or harbors a domestic animal, which he does not have reason to know to be abnormally dangerous but which is likely to do harm unless controlled, is subject to liability for harm done by such animal if, but only if, (a) he fails to exercise reasonable care to confine or otherwise control it, and (b) the harm is of a sort which it is normal for animals of its class to do," stated in Restatement, Torts § 518 (1), has been held applicable to the liability of owners of animals running at large for injuries resulting from a collision between such animals and a motor vehicle, the reason being the widespread use of motor vehicles.—Bender v. Welsh, 25 A.2d 182, 344 Pa. 392.

(2) An unattended horse on the highway at night is in obvious danger of becoming involved in a collision with an automobile which is being carefully driven, within the rule as to harm necessary.—Bender v. Welsh, supra.

Act in emergency

Instinctive act of owner, confronted by his approaching animal on a highway, in throwing up his hands, does not charge him with either fault or negligence.—Demarco v. Gober, 140 So. 64, 19 La.App. 236.

Lack of control of animal by owner indicates absence of negligence.—Demarco v. Gober, supra.

part of an animal running at large is brought about by an agency over which the owner had no control, and that which the animal did was not what its natural instincts or habit would cause it to do, or the act was one which its owner would not reasonably have anticipated on account of its natural disposition, no liability of the owner to respond in damages for injuring a motor vehicle or its occupant results.⁶⁴

Liability has been deemed to exist under a general statute imposing liability on everyone for want of ordinary care or skill in the management of property or person.⁶⁵ Where the owner of domestic animals negligently permits them to be at large in violation of law, he may be liable for injuries sustained by a motor vehicle or its occupants through a collision with them,⁶⁶ but the general rule of negligence that, unless the injury complained of is the proximate result thereof, and the person injured a member of the class intended to be protected by the statute and the injury of the kind

the statute intended to prevent, the violation of a statute does not constitute actionable negligence, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 19, also 45 C.J. p 726 note 75—p 730 note 9, applies.⁶⁷ A statutory provision that the owner or keeper of animals running at large is not liable for injuries caused by such animals when the owner or keeper has no knowledge that the animals are at large and has used reasonable care in restraining the animal has been held applicable to collisions between animals running at large and motor vehicles.⁶⁸

While no liability attaches by reason of the mere fact that an animal escapes from an enclosure in the absence of negligence,⁶⁹ even in the absence of statute, it has been held that his liability may be predicated on negligence where he places animals in an insufficient inclosure from which they stray on the highway, regardless of whether there is a known vicious propensity,⁷⁰ provided such negligence is the proximate cause of the injury.⁷¹

Fact that animal approached public way from owner's premises does not indicate owner's negligence.—Cusimano v. Giannobile, La.App., 15 So 2d 87.

Foreseeable injury

Owner, in exercise of care, foreseeing that injury would result from mule running at large near highway, would be negligent.—Lins v. Boeckeler Lumber Co., 299 S.W. 150, 221 Mo. App. 181.

Owner's duty

The owner of a horse had the duty to look after it and to use due care to control it; otherwise he was liable for damages horse caused when it ran into automobile upon a public highway.—Tassoni v. LeBoutillier, 196 A. 534, 130 Pa.Super. 303.

Prima facie negligence

An owner failing to "restrain" a boar running at large on the highway in violation of statute is prima facie negligent as to the driver of an automobile colliding with the animal.—Hansen v. Kemmish, 208 N.W. 277, 201 Iowa 1008, 45 A.L.R. 498.

67. Ala.—Crittenden v. Speake, 198 So. 137, 240 Ala 133

Statutes held inapplicable

(1) A statute imposing liability on animal owners for damages to property from permitting animals to go at large on premises of another has no application to highways so as to impose liability for injuries by animals running at large upon highways to motor vehicles or occupants thereof.

Ala.—Crittenden v. Speake, supra—Pelham v. Spears, 132 So. 886, 222 Ala. 365.

(2) So, a statute of similar nature is deemed intended to protect agricultural crops from the ravages of straying domestic animals and not motorists upon the highways.—Champlin Refining Co. v. Cooper, 86 P.2d 61, 184 Okl. 153.

(3) Statute imposing liability on stock owner for knowingly, voluntarily, negligently, or willfully permitting an animal to go at large in stock law precinct controls, rather than subsequently enacted statute.—Crittenden v. Speake, supra.

Absence of foreseeable neglect by owner indicates absence of negligence.—Bethune v. Bridges, supra.

Absence of duty to fence

Owners of pasture lands had absolute right to pasture their cattle on such lands without fencing lands from public highway.—Gholson v. Parrish, Tex Civ.App., 92 S.W.2d 1113.

70. Ohio.—Hugfelder v. Convent of the Good Shepherd, Toledo, Ohio, 9 N.E.2d 4, 55 Ohio App 158.

42 C.J. p 828 note 62.

Duty of owner to inclose domestic animals generally see Animals § 185.

Law of suretyship inapplicable

Owner's liability for damage to automobile caused by animals which had gone astray was to be measured by law of negligence rather than that of suretyship.—Bethune v. Bridges, 46 S.E.2d 711, 228 N.C. 623.

Care required

The owner of a calf is bound to exercise ordinary care and prudence to keep and maintain a fence around the pasture in which it was confined, and to adopt means that are reasonably suitable to prevent it from getting upon the highway.—Strait v. Bartholomew, 191 N.W. 811, 195 Iowa 377.

71. Wis.—Fox v. Koehnig, 209 N.W. 708, 190 Wis. 528.

42 C.J. p 829 note 63.

Held not proximate cause

Even though an insufficient barnyard fence resulted in a horse running loose upon a highway, such negligence was not the proximate cause of injury to a motor vehicle and occupants resulting from a collision

However, where liability is charged for violation of statute in that an insufficient fence was maintained, where the escape was due to acts of an independent agency over which the owner of the animal had no control and the situation was one which he could not have foreseen, the owner is not liable.⁷²

Injury to owner of animals. Where plaintiff, owner of animals being transported, engaged a trucker to transport the animals and assisted the trucker in course of transit but was injured when an animal fell from the truck onto him, the standard of care imposed on the trucker was that which a reasonably prudent person would have employed under the same or similar circumstances.⁷³

Wild animals. Since, as stated in Highways § 177, the construction, improvement, and repair of public highways is a governmental function primarily belonging to the state, failure of the state to provide suitable guards, railings, or fences so as to prevent access of wild animals on the highways does not impose liability on the state for injuries to a motorist caused by a collision between the motor vehicle and a wild animal.⁷⁴

(2) Animals Driven along Public Way

In the absence of a breach of a legal duty, the owner or keeper of domestic animals being driven along or across a public way is not liable for injuries occasioned to motor vehicles or occupants thereof.

Statute construed

The term "fence," in provision that no person owning or controlling livestock shall willfully or negligently permit such livestock to stray upon a public highway both sides of which are adjoined by property separated from such highway by a fence, is liberally construed in a civil action in determining whether such a fence exists and requisites thereof—Jackson v. Hardy, 160 P.2d 161, 70 Cal App.2d 6.

77. Herders

(1) A statute, prohibiting a person to feed, pasture, camp, or drive any livestock upon, over, or across any public highway between sunset and sunrise without a sufficient number of herders on continual duty to open the road so as to permit the passage of vehicles, has been construed to imply a requirement of a larger number of herders at night than in the daytime—Olden v. Babicora Development Co., supra.

(2) The statutory requirement is deemed to be that the herders should actually open the road for vehicles and within a reasonable time or there should be a reasonable attempt to do so.—Olden v. Babicora Development Co., supra.

(3) Such statute does not do away with the general rules of negligence, but merely adds a further obligation when the act is performed at night.—Olden v. Babicora Development Co., supra.

78. Cal.—Olden v. Babicora Development Co., supra.

While a person engaged in driving domestic animals along a public way has been held to have a higher duty of care in the modern motor age than in the days of horse-drawn vehicles,⁷⁵ no liability attaches because of a collision between the animals and a motor vehicle, in the absence of a breach of legal duty owed the owner, driver, or occupant of the motor vehicle.⁷⁶ On the other hand, liability may attach for breach of a statutory duty,⁷⁷ unless the proximate cause of the injury is an intervening act of a third person;⁷⁸ and even in the absence of statute a duty exists to exercise ordinary care in such use of the way as not to endanger others,⁷⁹ the question of what constitutes ordinary care being affected by the conditions prevailing at the time of the injury.⁸⁰ In the absence of statutory or ordinance requirement, there is no duty to have a light in driving animals along a public way after dark,⁸¹ although it has been held that whether the absence of a light in such circumstance constitutes negligence depends on the facts of the particular case.⁸²

(3) Injuries by Dogs

At common law the owner of a dog is not liable for injuries by such animal to motor vehicles or the occupants thereof, in the absence of notice or knowledge of vicious propensities of the animal.

The rule at common law is that no liability attaches to the owner of a dog for injuries caused to a motor vehicle or its occupants by such animal 82. Mo.—Yerger v. Smith, 89 S.W.2d 66, 338 Mo. 140.

Concurrent causes

Even if inadequacy of automobile lights was one of direct contributing causes of passenger's injury when automobile struck mule which was near middle of four-lane highway, defendant owner and rider of mule was not relieved of liability to passenger if defendants' negligence was also one of direct contributing causes.—Yerger v. Smith, supra.

Duty to keep animal on shoulder

(1) Where the owner has a statutory right to drive the animal along the public way, no duty exists to keep the animal on the shoulder of the way.—Yerger v. Smith, supra.

(2) Right to drive domestic animals along highway generally see Highways § 240 a.

in the absence of vicious propensities causing the injury, of which propensities the owner had knowledge.⁸³ However, where by statute an owner or harbinger of a dog is liable for injuries occasioned by the animal, liability may attach for injuries to a motor vehicle or occupants proximately caused by the dog,⁸⁴ as in the case of statutory liability of a parent for injuries caused by a dog owned by a minor.⁸⁵ A statutory liability for the acts of dogs has been construed to be confined to vicious or mischievous acts and to be inapplicable to innocent acts.⁸⁶

(4) Runaways

In the absence of negligence, neither the owner nor the person in charge of a runaway horse or team is liable for injuries occasioned by such animals to a motor vehicle or an occupant thereof.

Where an injury to a motor vehicle or its occupants is sustained through a collision with a runaway horse or team, no liability is imposed on the owner of the horse or team or the person in charge thereof in the absence of a showing of negligence.⁸⁷ The fact that an animal is left unattended and unsecured upon a public way,⁸⁸ or in the care of an incompetent driver,⁸⁹ may constitute negligence, particularly where such conduct constitutes a violation of a city ordinance,⁹⁰ or where the owner has knowledge of the tendency of the animal to run away,⁹¹ although knowledge of a propensity to run away is not essential to liability.⁹² One whose act frightens horses and causes them to run away and damage a motor vehicle is not liable for such injury where the particular consequence of the alleged negligent act could not reasonably have been anticipated.⁹³ The rule stated in Master and Servant § 322 a, that the fellow-servant rule does not absolve a master for the act of a servant in negligently damaging the property, rather than injuring the person, of a fellow servant, applies to render the master liable for a collision between a runaway in charge of one employee with the personal automobile of a fellow employee.⁹⁴

(5) Contributory Negligence

Contributory negligence may bar a recovery for damages arising from a collision between a motor vehicle and a domestic animal.

The driver of a motor vehicle cannot recover damages arising from a collision with a domestic animal where his own negligence was a proximate contributing cause of the accident.⁹⁵ Accordingly, a failure to reduce speed in case of obscured vision has been held the proximate cause of a collision with animals so as to bar recovery.⁹⁶ The "radius of lights" rule, as discussed supra § 201, has been applied in determining the negligence of the driver of a motor vehicle, precluding a recovery for injury sustained by striking animals upon the road.⁹⁷

The fact that the statute specifying lights for motorcycle did not provide for illumination to left did not excuse motorcyclist from seeing and it has been applied, although the driver has been required by the operation of a statute to dim his lights at the time of or immediately before the accident.⁹⁸ The negligence of the driver of the motor vehicle in failing to have lights complying with the statutory requirements, however, will not bar his recovery for a collision with an animal upon the highway where the failure to have lights was not shown to have contributed to his injury.⁹⁹ The maintenance of a reasonable driving speed at night is not contributory negligence, even though the driver is driving in an area in which he knows cattle are at large.¹ The driver of a motor truck, seeing a runaway horse approaching in a zigzag course, is not guilty of contributory negligence in turning first to the right and then to the left in an effort to avoid a collision;² nor is the driver of a motor vehicle, injured by a collision with a runaway team, guilty as a matter of law of contributory negligence because of his failure to stop when blinded by a light shining in his face, preventing him from seeing the team where he was upon the right side of the road and driving slowly.³ The driver of a motorcycle is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law precluding a recovery for an injury sustained by being kicked by one of the mules, where he attempts to pass a horse-drawn vehicle to the rear of which two mules are tied, although the driver of the vehicle has failed to drive to the right of the center of the road as required by statute.⁴ In determining the issue of contributory negligence statutes relating to a general rule of care and to prima facie speed limits, inapplicable to civil actions, need not be considered.⁵

b. Actions

The general rules with respect to civil actions apply to actions for injuries by animals to motor vehicles or occupants thereof.

Following the general rules of pleading in civil actions generally, the declaration, petition, or complaint in an action for damages for injury by an animal to a motor vehicle or its occupant must state a cause of action.⁶ Thus, where damages are sought for a collision with animals running at large while a general allegation of negligence may be sufficient,⁷ the declaration, petition, or complaint must contain some charge of negligence, general or specific.⁸ Where the action is based on a statutory prohibition as to animals running at large, it is unnecessary to plead or refer to the statute relied on⁹ and an allegation that a particular statutory provision was violated is redundant and surplusage,¹⁰ although an allegation that the cause of action is based on violation of statute is essential.¹¹ While facts must be pleaded which show that defendant should have anticipated that his acts or omissions might reasonably have been expected to result in injuries to persons on the public way,¹² a petition, based on a violation of statute, need not allege that defendant knew that the animals were at large, or that he had reasonable cause to believe such fact, or that by the exercise of ordinary care defendant could have known the probability that the animals might go upon the public way;¹³ but, where the action is based on the premise of mere negligence, a declaration, petition, or complaint which fails to allege that the injury was such as was likely to arise from the animal in question and that the owner of the animal knew of such propensities of the animal is demurrable.¹⁴ Every essential allegation of plaintiff's pleading must be supported by appropriate proof.¹⁵

Knowledge of animal's propensities Where damages are sought because of the negligence of the owner of an animal in permitting it to run at large, it must be proved that the animal was of such nature that the injury done was likely to arise from such animal and that the owner

Evidence. Plaintiff has the burden of proving defendant's negligence,¹⁶ that is, plaintiff has the burden of proving that defendant owed him a duty, that defendant violated such duty, that such violation caused plaintiff's injury, and that plaintiff sustained actual damage as a result thereof.¹⁷ The burden of proving plaintiff's contributory negligence rests with defendant.¹⁸ Where defendant's animals are at large in violation of statute, plaintiff has no duty to show how the animals came to be loose or who permitted them to go upon the public way;¹⁹ but proof of ownership raises a prima facie presumption of negligence of defendant and shifts the burden of offering evidence to the owner,²⁰ although, where the statute alleged to have been violated has no application to injuries to motorists, mere proof of the presence of the animals upon the public way does not avoid plaintiff's burden of proving defendant's negligence.²¹ Where a rebuttable presumption of defendant's negligence is raised, defendant has the burden of proving freedom from fault.²² Where defendant desires the benefit of a statute providing that the owner or keeper of domestic animals shall not be liable for damages due to such animals running at large when he has no knowledge of the running at large and has used reasonable restraint of the animals, he has the burden of proving his lack of knowledge of the running at large and his use of reasonable restraint of the animals, since such facts are peculiarly within his own knowledge.²³

Where plaintiff has made out a prima facie case of negligence as to injury from defendant's runaway team, the burden of showing freedom from negligence or fault is cast on defendant.²⁴

Under some statutes no presumption or inference exists in civil actions against the owner of domestic animals for damages caused by a collision between a motor vehicle and such animal,²⁵ but generally the leaving of an animal such as a horse unattended on a city street and not under the control of a driver raises a presumption of negligence.²⁶ Evidence that defendant's property was enclosed but that he was replacing a gate with a cattle guard through which opening his animals escaped to the public way has been held to create a rebuttable presumption of some defect in the construction of the cattle guard or in the state in which it was left at the time of the accident.²⁷ The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has been held to apply,²⁸ but it has also been held that the doctrine does not apply where a motor vehicle was struck by a domestic animal running at large upon the public highway,²⁹ and the mere fact that there was a runaway has been held not necessarily to imply negligence.³⁰

The rules as to the admissibility of evidence in civil actions generally, and particularly the rules in actions for negligence, apply in actions for injuries by animals to motor vehicles or occupants thereof.³¹ Accordingly, irrelevant³² is not admis-knew of the propensity.—Pelham v Spears, supra.

Effect

The fact that there is no presumption or inference of negligence on part of owner of livestock because of collision between motor vehicle and livestock on highway does not entitle owner of cattle to maintain cattle with such want of ordinary care or skill as to cause injury to another.—*Bartlett v. In California

(1) In an action for violation of former Motor Vehicle Act § 151 the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was held applicable.—Kenney v. Antonetti, 295 P. 341, 211 Cal. 336.

(2) Even though, in reenacting such section as Agricultural Code § 423, the legislature expressly provided that there should be no presumption that the collision was due to negligence of the owner of the animal, the sole effect was to abolish the effect of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and not the doctrine. U.S.—Galleppi Bros. v. Bartlett, C.C. A. Cal., 120 F.2d 208.

Cal.—Jackson v. Hardy, 160 P.2d 161, 70 Cal.App.2d 6.

(3) So it has been held that, even under such reenactment, reliance may be made on the doctrine.—Anderson v. I. M. Jameson Corporation, 59 P.2d 962, 7 Cal.2d 60.

sible, and, likewise, remote evidence³³ and immaterial evidence³⁴ is not admissible. The general rule that the practice of an individual cannot be admitted in evidence either on the question of negligence or for the purpose of showing a general custom or usage relative to negligence, as considered in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 232, also 45 C.J. p 1243 notes 16-18, applies to render inadmissible evidence of defendant's custom to graze animals in the particular location without injury to motor vehicles or occupants thereof.³⁵

In an action for simple negligence in permitting the animal to do the injury, the negligence must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence.³⁶ The mere presence of domestic animals at large and unattended on a public way, in violation of statute which is inapplicable to drivers of motor vehicles, does not amount to prima facie evidence of negligence,³⁷ but the contrary is true where the statute violated is applicable to motorists;³⁸ and evidence of presence of unattended animals, together with other evidence, may establish a prima facie case for plaintiff.³⁹ Where plaintiff proves that the cause of injury was defendant's runaway team, it has been held that he establishes a prima facie case of negligence,⁴⁰ although it has been held that the mere presence of a runaway horse and vehicle on a public way is not prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the person in control.⁴¹

Questions of law and fact. Under the rules applicable as to the province of the court and jury with regard to questions of negligence generally, questions of negligence in actions for injuries occasioned by animals are ordinarily for the jury,⁴² as, for example, the question of negligence of an owner in permitting an animal to escape from its inclosure and be upon the highway,⁴³ or in permitting an animal to be at large upon the highway in violation of a statute requiring his restraint,⁴⁴ or in leaving a team to remain unfastened and unattended in an open yard whence it ran away from a highway,⁴⁵ or in driving animals upon the public highway at night.⁴⁶ Whether laws requiring the keeping of animals in inclosures have been violated is also a question for the jury.⁴⁷ In like manner, it is ordinarily a question for the jury whether plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence,⁴⁸ as, for example, in driving without proper lights,⁴⁹ or in failing to see the animal in time to avoid the accident.⁵⁰

Ordinarily, the question of proximate cause is one of fact for the jury.⁵¹ There is some conflict of authority as to whether negligence of the owner of horses in turning them into an insufficiently fenced field may be regarded as the proximate cause of a collision between them and a motor vehicle when they subsequently escape upon the highway, it having been held that it may be determined as a matter of law that the injury is not such as the owner is bound to anticipate;⁵² and it has also been held to the contrary that it is a question of fact whether the owner could not have reasonably anticipated such result where he turns them loose into a defectively fenced field adjacent to a much traveled highway.⁵³ Where damages are sought for injuries from a collision between a motor vehicle and animals being driven along a public way, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the negligence of the driver of the vehicle was the proximate cause of the injury.⁵⁴ On conflicting evidence, the question of ownership of animals, collision with which occasions the injury to a motor vehicle complained of, is for the jury.⁵⁵ Where by application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur plaintiff establishes a prima facie case, a motion for nonsuit is properly denied,⁵⁶ and, likewise, where the evidence supports a finding of defendant's negligence, his motion for directed verdict is properly denied.⁵⁷

Instructions. As in other civil actions, the instructions must be in conformity with the evidence,⁵⁸ and must not be misleading.⁵⁹ The instructions must be responsive to the issues,⁶⁰ and requested instructions on immaterial issues need not be given.⁶¹ It is not error to refuse requested instructions sufficiently covered by other instructions.⁶²

Judgment. Where the findings are in irreconcilable conflict, no judgment may be entered thereon.⁶³

§ 566. Injuries by Vehicle Other than Motor Vehicle

One whose negligence in the management or control of a horse-drawn or other vehicle, not a motor vehicle, occasions injury to a motor vehicle may be held liable for the damages so occasioned.

One whose negligence in the management or control of a horse-drawn or other vehicle, not a motor vehicle, occasions injury to a motor vehicle may be held liable for the damages so occasioned;⁶⁴ liability may also attach for the negligent acts of an agent, servant, or employee within the scope of their employment,⁶⁵ although, in accordance with the general rules discussed in Master and Servant § 566 c, where a team and a driver are hired and the hirer is not vested with exclusive control, the owner, and not the hirer, must respond for injuries occasioned third persons.⁶⁶ Where the combined negligence of the operator of a motor vehicle and the operator of a horse-drawn vehicle united to cause injury to an occupant of the motor vehicle, the injured person may recover against the owner of the horse-drawn vehicle, provided there is no contributory negligence.⁶⁷

The rights and duties of the driver of a team and the driver of a motor vehicle are reciprocal and each is required to obey the law of the road.⁶⁸ No duty rests with plaintiff to anticipate a sudden violation of a law of the road.⁶⁹ There must be a compliance with governmental regulations.⁷⁰

Proximate cause. Liability may attach for an injury to a motor vehicle or its occupants, even though the injury resulted from the inherent nature of a horse drawing the colliding vehicle.⁷¹ However, if the act complained of was accidental or beyond the control of defendant and without any negligence on his part but resulting from an inherent tendency of the horse, liability does not attach.⁷²

Contributory negligence. Violation of regulations may constitute contributory negligence which, if a contributing proximate cause of the injury, will bar recovery.⁷³ Failure of a motorist to exercise an opportunity to avoid a collision with a horse-drawn vehicle emerging onto the street from private premises has been held to constitute contributory negligence.⁷⁴ Various acts have been

Absence of negligence

Where a motor vehicle struck a horse-drawn vehicle which was on its proper side of the street, the driver of the vehicle struck was held not negligent.—Zullo v. Detroit Creamery Co., supra.

Where relationship of agency or employee does not exist, owner is not liable for injuries occasioned by another.—Powers v. Wheelless, 9 S.E.2d 129, 193 S.C. 364.

68. Pa.—Sprout v. Kirk, 80 Pa.Super. 514.

69. Pa.—Sprout v. Kirk, supra.

Sudden change of course without warning

The driver of a motor vehicle passing a horse-drawn vehicle is not bound to anticipate a sudden deflection of the horse-drawn vehicle from the right of the road toward the left.—Sprout v. Kirk, supra.

Assumption

Plaintiff riding on step of truck could assume that ice wagon driver would take care not to collide with him.—Robinson v. American Ice Co., 141 A. 244, 292 Pa. 366.

70. Regulation of turning

(1) An ordinance requiring that in making a left turn the vehicle turning must pass to the right of and beyond the street intersection is not violated by a sudden and sharp turn to the left without intending to turn left.—Squier v. Davis Standard Bread Co., 185 P. 391, 181 Cal. 533.

(2) However, the ordinance relates to the act of turning from its beginning, rather than the passing of the center of the intersection, so that, if a turn is intentionally begun so as to place the center of the intersection on the right, the ordinance is violated even if the turn is corrected so as to pass the intersection properly.—Squier v. Davis Standard Bread Co., supra.

(3) An ordinance providing that a vehicle turning from one side of the street to the other shall do so only by going to the intersection and turning to the left past the center of the intersection is violated by a turning left other than at the intersection in order to enter a private driveway.—Ford v. Des Moines Ice, etc., Co., 174 N.W. 486, 187 Iowa 729.

(4) Even though an ordinance requires a signal for turning, failure of a driver of a horse-drawn vehicle to comply with such ordinance does not amount to negligence as to a motorist who had ample opportunity to observe the vehicle.—Daniels v. Langensand, 96 S.W.2d 911, 231 Mo. App. 777.

Exemption

Statute exempting hay wagon from statutory duty of displaying lights does not relieve operator thereof from common-law liability for negligence in collision with automobile.—Comer v. Werner, 8 N.E.2d 455, 54 Ohio App. 547.

held not to amount to contributory negligence.⁷⁵ The mere fact that plaintiffs approached the point of accident by means of a way not open to public travel is immaterial as to the question of their contributory negligence.⁷⁶

§ 567. — Actions in General

The general rules applicable to civil actions govern questions of the right to sue, pleading, and verdict in actions for injuries to motor vehicles or occupants thereof by vehicles other than motor vehicles.

Except where the right to sue has been conferred on another, an action for injuries to a motor vehicle or its occupants by a vehicle other than a motor vehicle should be brought by the person injured by defendant's negligence.⁷⁷

Pleading. Following the general rules of pleading in civil actions generally, the declaration, petition, or complaint in an action for injuries to a motor vehicle or occupants therein by a vehicle other than a motor vehicle must state a cause of action.⁷⁸ Where defendant's vehicle was being operated at the time of the injury by defendant's agent or employee, a general allegation of such operation within the scope of the employment, without a specific allegation of the details of the employment, is sufficient,⁷⁹ since the general allegation is sufficient to create a presumption that the agent or employee was acting in behalf of defendant and in discharge of his duties,⁸⁰ so as to permit denial by defendant.⁸¹ It has been held that the petition, declaration, or complaint need not negative contributory negligence,⁸² but, if it affirmatively shows that plaintiff's contributory negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, it is defective.⁸³ An allegation that plaintiff's negligence was the sole cause of the accident and a prayer for dismissal on that ground have been held to be sufficient to raise the issue of contributory negligence.⁸⁴ Where a defense of contributory negligence in violating a regulation is raised, in order for plaintiff to rebut such contention by showing the invalidity of such regulation he must aver the invalidity in his reply, provided a reply is permissible.⁸⁵ Every essential element of the pleadings must be supported by appropriate proof.⁸⁶

Verdict. The general rule in civil actions that the verdict must respond to the issues raised by the pleadings and evidence applies to actions of this character.⁸⁷

§ 568. — Evidence

The general rules as to evidence in civil actions govern as to presumptions, burden of proof, admissibility, and weight and sufficiency of evidence in actions for injuries to motor vehicles or occupants thereof by vehicles other than motor vehicles.

Ordinarily, the mere fact of damage or injury to a motor vehicle or its occupants by a vehicle not a motor vehicle is not a sufficient basis for a presumption or inference that defendant was negligent.⁸⁸ Plaintiff has the burden of proving all the facts essential to his recovery.⁸⁹ The rules applicable in the case of civil actions generally apply in determining the admissibility⁹⁰ and weight

§ 569. — Questions of Law and Fact

In actions for injuries to motor vehicles or occupants thereof by vehicles other than motor vehicles, questions of negligence, contributory negligence, and proximate cause are ordinarily for the jury.

Questions of law and fact. Under the rules applicable in other civil actions involving issues of negligence, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 252-263, also 45 C.J. p 1279 note 29-p 1316 note 8, questions of negligence⁹² and of contributory negligence⁹³ are ordinarily questions of fact for the jury. The same is true as to the question of what was the proximate cause of the injury.⁹⁴ On the other hand, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the blocking of a street intersection at night during the time of continuous use without warning or signal is not negligence.⁹⁵ Plaintiff's failure to comply with a regulation of sounding his horn before attempting to pass another vehicle cannot be held to amount to contributory negligence as a matter of law where plaintiff had no immediate intention of passing;⁹⁶ nor does plaintiff's violation of an order prohibiting use of a road under construction amount to contributory negligence as a matter of law in the absence of a legislative intent that violation of such order should constitute contributory negligence;⁹⁷ and a motorcyclist is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in traveling at a lawful speed so as to preclude his recovery in case of a collision with a horse-drawn vehicle making a sharp turn in front of him.⁹⁸ Likewise, an act of plaintiff in an emergency in passing defendant's vehicle on the wrong side has been held not to be negligence as a matter of law.⁹⁹

§ 570. — Instructions

Questions as to construction and scope of instructions in actions for injuries to motor vehicles or occupants thereof by vehicles other than motor vehicles are governed by the general rules of instructions in civil actions.

Under the rules applicable to instructions in civil actions generally, the instructions should be construed as a whole,¹ should confine the jury to the issues,² and should not assume controverted facts.³

X. RACES AND SPEED TRIALS

A. RACES OR TESTS UPON HIGHWAYS OR STREETS

§ 571. Authority to Permit

Local authorities may be authorized to permit speed races or tests over public ways.

An exception to legislative speed regulations exists, under some statutes, in that local authorities are authorized to set aside for a given time a specified public highway for speed races or tests.⁴ However, an ordinance or resolution authorizing use of a specified street by a particular body for automobile racing has been held illegal as violating the municipality's delegated power to regulate speed of motor vehicles, as an unauthorized grant of the use of a street for private purposes so as to exclude the public, and as operating as a participation by the city in the commission of an unlawful act.⁵

§ 572. Liability of Public Authorities

Generally a municipal corporation is not liable for injuries to the public from the running of a speed race or test along public ways, although under some statutes such liability may exist.

In the absence of a statute imposing liability on a municipal corporation for its negligent exercise or negligent discharge of purely governmental functions⁶ it cannot be held liable to one injured by a motor vehicle in a race in a public street by reason of the negligence of its officials in allowing the race to be run and in not providing police protection.⁷ So a municipality is not liable for injuries to a spectator by reason of its illegal authorization of the use of a street for automobile racing,⁸ although it has been said that it may well be that the municipality in such case of illegal authorization would be absolutely liable to a traveler, to occupants of adjoining land, and to persons seeking evidence for prosecution, regardless of the skill or care exercised.⁹

§ 573. Liability of Participants

Both civil and criminal liability may be imposed on persons promoting, aiding, or abetting speed races or tests along public ways.

Those who promote, aid, or abet a motor vehicle race upon a public highway, whether public officials or private persons, may be personally liable to a bystander or spectator injured by their negligence,¹⁰ although it has been intimated that their liability, at least as to spectators, does not extend to liability other than for negligence.¹¹ Where a race is held under an illegal permit from the municipal authorities, such fact alone, regardless of negligence or misconduct, is not sufficient to impose liability as to a spectator who is at the scene of the race expressly to witness it and enjoy the pleasure that the contest offers,¹² although it has been said that it may well be that the participants in such case would be absolutely liable to a traveler, to occupants of adjoining lands, and to persons seeking evidence for prosecution, regardless of the skill or care exercised.¹³ Moreover, where by statute a street obstruction amounting to a nuisance is made a crime, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Municipal Corporations § 1756, also 44 C.J. p 1024 note 95—p 1025 note 7, a race or speed contest held under such illegal authorization is an unlawful use and obstruction of the street so as to constitute a nuisance per se within the criminal statute.¹⁴ The owner of a vehicle occasioning the injury cannot be held liable for damages without a showing that it was entered

§ 574. Trespass by Spectator

The right of a spectator to recover for injuries because of a speed contest along a public way is not affected by the fact that he is a trespasser on land adjacent to the highway.

The fact that one injured while a spectator of a speed contest upon a public highway is a trespasser in entering on land adjacent to the highway has no bearing on his right to recover if defendants were guilty of negligence or other fault.¹⁶

§ 575. Contributory Negligence

Contributory negligence of a spectator at speed races or tests along a public way bars recovery.

A spectator injured at a road race cannot recover against the owner of a car taking part in the race where he has been guilty of contributory negligence.¹⁷

§ 576. Actions

General rules of procedure govern actions for injuries resulting from speed races and tests along public highways and streets.

The general rules of evidence apply in actions for damages for injuries from racing or tests of automobiles upon highways or streets.¹⁸ Where a speed contest is conducted upon a public highway, the question whether it, as conducted, was in fact a nuisance,¹⁹ or whether the persons conducting it were guilty of negligence in the management of the race,²⁰ or whether a spectator was guilty of contributory negligence,²¹ is a question of fact for the jury.

B. RACES AND TESTS UPON TRACKS AND SPEEDWAYS

§ 577. Duties and Liabilities of Persons Conducting or Promoting

Public authorities and private persons who maintain race tracks and speedways for automobile or similar racing are liable for injuries due to their negligence.

One who invites the public to attend a race between motor vehicles and charges an admission fee is bound to exercise reasonable care to make the place provided for spectators reasonably safe,²² but, although a spectator is injured, no liability may be imposed on the persons conducting the races, in the absence of a showing of negligence on their part.²³

Where the state permits a motor vehicle race upon a track owned by it without the exercise of reasonable care to provide against accidents to spectators from the vehicles leaving the track, it is liable in the same manner as a private individual,²⁴ since, where it invites the attendance of the public and charges an admission fee, with resulting profit, it is acting as the proprietor of a race track and not in a governmental capacity.²⁵

Acts of independent contractor. An association which is giving an exhibition upon grounds in its possession to which it charges an admission, which has offered a prize for a speed and endurance contest between automobiles upon a track upon its grounds, cannot, although one of the contestants was negligent and a spectator was thereby injured, escape liability on the ground that the participant inflicting the injury acted independently of the association in the manner of staging the attraction.²⁶ So, although races held upon a track located upon a state fair ground are conducted by an independent contractor, the state may be liable for its negligence in permitting such a race to be held upon a track owned by it, without reasonable precautions to protect those who have been invited by the state to witness the exhibition and who have paid the state for the privilege.²⁷

§ 578. Duties and Liabilities of Owners of Participating Vehicles

Liability for the acts of the driver attaches to the owner of a vehicle participating in a motor vehicle race upon a track or speedway.

The owner of a motor vehicle who permits another to use it in connection with racing in contemplation of some benefit to be derived from its use to the business of the owner is liable for the acts of the person so using it.²⁸

§ 579. Duties and Liabilities of Race Drivers

Racing drivers participating in motor vehicle racing upon tracks and speedways must exercise care to avoid injury to licensees and invitees.

Where, after the close of automobile races, the spectators go upon the track, they are licensees,²⁹ and a racing driver who continues to drive around the track owes to such licensees, when he knows or has good reason to expect them to be upon the track, the duty of exercising ordinary care to avoid injury.³⁰ As to a licensee who is injured by racing drivers during a practice run, the drivers owe a duty to exercise reasonable care and prudence for his safety and to refrain from wanton or reckless acts.³¹ A driver whose gross negligence causes another driver to injure such licensee is liable therefor,³² provided such gross negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.³³ The duty owed by a driver of a racing car to an invitee riding with him in a race is greater than merely the duty to refrain from willful or intentional injury;³⁴ the duty is that of reasonable care,³⁵

and what is meant by reasonable or ordinary care must be determined in connection with the circumstances and surroundings of the particular case.³⁶ This duty continues when, after finishing the race, the driver continues to drive at high speed.³⁷

§ 580. Duty toward Trespassers

Persons owning and driving vehicles entered in races are bound only to refrain from willfully injuring a trespasser.

One who is a trespasser at an automobile race at a track or speedway is entitled only to have the owners of the racing cars and the drivers abstain from willfully injuring him.³⁸

§ 581. Contributory Negligence and Assumption of Risk

Application of the doctrines of contributory negligence and assumption of risk to liability for injuries in motor vehicle racing upon tracks and speedways is discussed infra §§ 582-584.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 582. — Spectators

A recovery by a spectator at a motor vehicle race upon a track or speedway may be precluded by his contributory negligence.

Under the general rules of contributory negligence applicable to actions based on negligence, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 116-173, also 45 C.J. p 941 note 27-p 1013 note 60, a recovery by a spectator injured at a motor vehicle race upon a track or speedway may be precluded by his contributory negligence;³⁹ but he is not guilty of contributory negligence in occupying a place in which spectators are allowed and expected to stand without warning of danger.⁴⁰

44. Declaration, petition, or complaint held sufficient

A mechanic riding an automobile in a race does not assume the risk of a latent defect in the track, where he had not discerned, and had no opportunity to discover, such defect, it not being his duty to inspect the roadway.⁴¹ One who intends to take part in motorcycle races to be held at the conclusion of horse races upon a race track, who takes a position of danger inside the track and is injured by a bolting horse, assumes the risk of injury.⁴²

§ 584. — Special Policemen or Others Rightfully upon Track

A person rightfully upon a motor vehicle track or speedway ordinarily is not guilty of contributory negligence.

Under the rule that one doing what it is his right to do in the discharge of his duty is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, if he exercises ordinary care and prudence, although the result shows that he imperiled his personal safety, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 126, also 45 C.J. p 969 note 53, a special policeman or watchman at a race track which is being used by motocyclists practicing for a race, whose duty is to prevent children and other spectators from getting upon the track, was not guilty of contributory negligence in taking a position between the gate posts of a gate in a fence surrounding the track and within the fence.⁴³

§ 585. Pleading

The general rules of pleading in civil actions apply in actions for injuries at a motor vehicle track or speedway.

Following the general rules of pleading in civil actions generally, the declaration, petition, or complaint in an action for damages for injuries at a race track or speedway must state a cause of action.⁴⁴ The general rules relating to issues, proof, and variance in pleadings in civil actions apply in actions for injuries from races and tests upon tracks and speedways.⁴⁵

§ 586. Evidence

The general rules of evidence in civil actions govern matters of evidence in actions for injuries at a motor vehicle track or speedway.

The weight and sufficiency of evidence in actions for injuries from races and tests upon tracks and speedways are determined in accordance with the general rules of evidence.⁴⁶

§ 587. Trial

In actions for injuries caused by a motor vehicle racing upon a track or speedway, questions of law and fact, nonsuit, instructions, and findings are governed by the rules applicable to civil actions generally.

The general rules applicable in civil actions as to questions of law⁴⁷ and fact,⁴⁸ and nonsuit,⁴⁹ apply in actions for injuries from racing and tests upon tracks and speedways.

Instructions must not be misleading,⁵⁰ must not invade the province of the jury,⁵¹ and must be applicable to the evidence.⁵²

Findings. A failure to find one of two independent acts of negligence alleged will not prevent a recovery.⁵³

XI. OFFENSES AND PROSECUTIONS

A. IN GENERAL

§ 588. In General

Violation of statutory regulations as to motor vehicles may be made a felony or misdemeanor. Questions relating to indictments and informations, defenses, jury trials, evidence, and questions of law and fact in criminal prosecutions for such offenses are governed by general rules.

In some jurisdictions a violation of statutory regulations with respect to motor vehicles is made a criminal offense.⁵⁴ The motor vehicle regulatory statutes and ordinances have been construed to be penal⁵⁵ and quasi-criminal⁵⁶ in nature. Statutes denouncing such offenses should be given a reasonable construction,⁵⁷ but should not be enlarged by intendment, in that, where there is an ambiguity, such ambiguity must be resolved against the penalty and only those cases brought within an injury sustained through a racing motor vehicle leaving the track under an allegation that the particular place in which plaintiff was had been allotted for spectators, it may be shown that the place had been used for spectators on former occasions without proof of the elements necessary to establish a custom.—Jerrell v. Harrisburg Fair, etc., Ass'n, 215 Ill.App. 273.

(2) Under an allegation of want of ordinary care, evidence of gross negligence is admissible.—Liston v. Reynolds, 223 P. 507, 69 Mont. 480—42 C.J. p 1303 note 44.

Classification

Under Uniform Traffic Act, there are two general classes of penal statutes: those making penal the doing or refraining from doing of a definite act specified in a statute imposing an absolute duty and violation of which constitutes a criminal act of itself, as operating a vehicle while in a state of intoxication and requiring motor vehicles to be driven on the right side of the highway except under certain conditions, and, those making penal the failure to observe a general rule of conduct such as speed regulations and prohibiting starting from parking position unless such movement can be made with reasonable safety.—State v. Saam, supra.

Not crimes

Traffic infractions have been expressly declared by some statutes not to be crimes.—McDonald v. Central School Dist. No. 3 of Towns of Romulus, Varick and Fayette, Seneca County, 39 N.Y.S.2d 103, 179 Misc. 333, affirmed 36 N.Y.S.2d 438, 284 App.Div. 943, affirmed 47 N.E.2d 50, 289 N.Y. 800.

the statute which are clearly within its meaning and intention.⁵⁸ By the enactment creating them, the violation of these regulations is frequently made a misdemeanor,⁵⁹ and in some cases, a felony.⁶⁰ In accordance with the general principles discussed in Criminal Law § 25, the failure of a motor vehicle act to provide a penalty, although it provides that certain acts shall constitute a felony, will not preclude such acts from constituting a crime or public offense where resort may be had to a general statute for the purpose of fixing the penalty,⁶¹ and this is true, although the maximum penalty provided by such general statute might be severe, where the imposition of the maximum penalty is not imperative.⁶² While it has been said that provisions of general criminal statutes do not apply to violations of statutory regulations of motor vehicles,⁶³ nevertheless, in addition to offenses growing out of violations of regulations peculiar to the ownership and management of motor vehicles, offenses of general cognizance in the criminal law may sometimes involve a motor vehicle either as to the subject matter of the offense or the agency by which it is committed, and to such extent such offenses are hereinafter specifically treated.

With respect to conflicting ordinances, statutory provisions are controlling in cases of offenses covered by such law,⁶⁴ but, under a statutory prohibition of local ordinances as to motor vehicle regulations except as to cities of specified classes, a city within such excepted classes has power to enact penal ordinances as to motor vehicles.⁶⁵

Information to accused. In some jurisdictions the court has a mandatory⁶⁶ duty to inform a person accused of an offense relating to motor vehicles that in case of conviction he will be subject to a penalty and to suspension or revocation of his certificate of registration and driver's license.⁶⁷ Noncompliance with such requirement renders the judgment of conviction void and subject to collateral attack,⁶⁸ or the judgment may be reversed.⁶⁹

Indictments and informations. The general rules relating to indictments and informations control as to indictments, informations, and complaints charging offenses in connection with motor vehicles.⁷⁰

Defenses. Neither negligence nor contributory negligence of a person injured by accused constitutes a defense to a prosecution for a statutory offense.⁷¹

Jury trial. In some jurisdictions an express statutory requirement exists that in prosecutions for offenses relating to motor vehicles the right to trial by jury shall be preserved.⁷²

Evidence. In prosecutions for a violation of the traffic laws, a presumption has been said to exist that a person acts for his own safety.⁷³ In accordance with the general rule that the legislature has power to declare what shall be prima facie evidence in criminal proceedings, as discussed in Constitutional Law § 128 d, a municipality may provide by ordinance that violation of traffic ordinances by motor vehicle shall be prima facie evidence that the violation was by or with the authority or permission of the owner of the vehicle.⁷⁴ The general rule that in order to sustain a conviction on circumstantial evidence all the circumstances proved must be inconsistent with every other reasonable hypothesis except that of guilt, as considered in Criminal Law § 907 c, applies in prosecutions relating to motor vehicles.⁷⁵

Questions of law and fact. Where intent is essential to an offense relating to motor vehicles, and such intent is supplied by the operation of the vehicle in a manner prohibited by law, whether the operation constituted culpable negligence is a question of fact.⁷⁶

§ 589. Capacity to Commit Crime

The capacity to commit, and responsibility for, crimes generally is discussed in Criminal Law §§ 55-72.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 590. Parties to Offense

Generally, criminal responsibility does not attach to the owner of a motor vehicle for acts of others in operating the vehicle.

As a general rule a person who neither owned the motor vehicle nor had control of the driver may not be held criminally responsible for the negligence or wantonness of the driver,⁷⁷ and a motor vehicle is not a dangerous instrument per se so as to render the owner criminally responsible for its operation by another.⁷⁸ So the mere fact of ownership of the motor vehicle⁷⁹ or mere presence of the owner in the vehicle⁸⁰ does not impose criminal responsibility on the owner for the acts of another person driving the vehicle. The owner, however, is liable for his own operation of the vehicle,⁸¹ and he has also been held responsible when the vehicle is operated under his control;⁸² and it has been held that he is liable in all cases when he is present at the time, unless his instructions are disobeyed by the driver.⁸³ Under the rule that all who participate in the commission of a misdemeanor are principals and may be charged as such, as discussed in Criminal Law § 81 b, where the offense is a misdemeanor, the owner of the car or one having such special property as gives him the right to control it, who is occupying it but not driving it, may be guilty as a principal.⁸⁴

Exemptions. While the traffic laws usually contain express exemptions of various public vehicles, such as fire, police, and ambulances, such provisions are to be extended with the greatest of caution,⁸⁵ and the exemption usually is limited to the discharge of functions vitally connected with public safety or to those of public importance.⁸⁶

§ 591. Knowledge, Intent, and Malice

Unless required by statute, a criminal intent is not an essential element of an offense relating to motor vehicles.

In accordance with the general principle that a action shall be commenced by the filing of an affidavit and the right of trial by jury as provided by law shall be preserved, preserves the right to trial by jury and does not create the right in a case where it would not otherwise exist.—*City of Cincinnati v. legislature may forbid the doing of, or the failure to do, an act and make its commission or omission criminal without regard to the intent or knowledge of the doer, as discussed in Criminal Law § 30, it is not arbitrary or unreasonable to impose a fine and imprisonment for a violation of the law as to motor vehicles on a citizen who acted without any criminal intent and in ignorance of any violation of law.⁸⁷ Specific intent is unnecessary as an ingredient of the offense involved in a violation of a motor vehicle law unless it is made so by statute.⁸⁸ However, a statute providing that a person shall not be convicted of a crime or misdemeanor committed by misfortune or accident where it satisfactorily appears there was no evil design, intention, or culpable neglect applies to offenses relating to motor vehicles,⁸⁹ as does a statutory requirement that in order to constitute a crime or misdemeanor there shall be a union or joint operation of act and intention, or criminal negligence.⁹⁰ Where intent is made an essential element of an offense relating to motor vehicles, the operation of such vehicle in a manner prohibited by law takes the place of, and supplies, the required intent.⁹¹

§ 592. Jurisdiction in General

Statutes and ordinances usually regulate questions of jurisdiction of particular courts as to criminal prosecutions for offenses relating to motor vehicles.

Courts have the duty of supplementing the enforcement of traffic laws and regulations relating to motor vehicles by the police in such fashion as to reduce accidents and alleviate the effects caused by traffic accidents.⁹² The question of what court has jurisdiction over criminal offenses involving motor vehicles usually depends on provisions of statutes and ordinances.⁹³ The criminal jurisdiction of justices of the peace, police justices, and similar officers as to offenses under motor vehicle laws is stated in Criminal Law § 125 b, and jurisdiction in summary proceedings is discussed in Criminal Law § 379.

§ 593. Arrest and Bail or Deposit in General

Matters dealing with arrest for violation of laws with respect to the operation of motor vehicles are discussed in Arrest. Admission to bail by a committing magistrate is discussed in Criminal Law § 348, and the legality of bail taken on Sunday is treated in the C.J.S. title Sunday § 48, also 60 C.J. p 1142 note 6-p 1143 n 17.

§ 594. Punishment in General

The punishment to be imposed for an offense relating to motor vehicles usually is regulated by statute.

The punishment to be imposed following conviction of an offense involving a motor vehicle is usually regulated by statute,⁹⁴ and in some jurisdictions the punishment cannot be in excess of that recommended by the jury.⁹⁵ A fine imposed must not exceed that authorized by the statute;⁹⁶ nor can it exceed the jurisdiction of the court, although its amount is authorized by the statute creating the offense.⁹⁷ In some jurisdictions statutes have been held to authorize the probation of persons convicted of offenses relating to motor vehicles,⁹⁸ and in such case a fine may be imposed as

Autoist injuring another while violating motor vehicle statute with reckless disregard of consequences or heedless indifference to others' safety, and with reasonable foresight that injury would probably result, would be criminally culpable.—State v. Stansell, 164 S.E. 580, 203 N.C. 69.

Applicability of general statute

(1) A statute specifying punishment for misdemeanors generally has been held to include punishment for statutory misdemeanors relating to motor vehicles.—Bopp v. Murphy, 168 A. 129, 11 N.J.Misc. 747.

(2) However, a general statute does not apply where a statute relating to punishment for offenses as to motor vehicles exists.—Ex parte Borah, 24 P.2d 841, 134 Cal.App. 14.

General provision construed

Under a statute relating to offenses involving motor vehicles, a provision for punishment for violation of "any of the other provisions of this article" means the same article of the statute relating to motor vehicles and such sections therein not otherwise providing for punishment.—State v. Ball, Mo.App., 171 S.W.2d 787.

a condition of probation, provided it does not amount to the imposition of a punishment in excess of the punishment recommended by the jury.⁹⁹

Effect of amendment as to place of imprisonment. The validity of a conviction under a statute punishing offenses in relation to motor vehicles is not affected by an amendatory act expressly providing that imprisonment on conviction shall be in the county jail, where such would have been the place of imprisonment in the absence of any express provision therefor.¹

§ 595. Costs

Matters relating to costs in criminal cases generally are discussed in Costs §§ 435-480.

B. PARTICULAR OFFENSES

§ 596. Alteration of Numbers or Identification Marks

The kind of motor vehicle or other contrivance or apparatus contemplated by statutes making it an offense to alter or remove identifying numbers or marks thereon depends on the wording of the particular statute involved. General rules govern in respect of prosecutions for such offenses.

Under statutes providing that anyone who willfully removes, defaces, covers, alters, or destroys the manufacturer's serial number or any other distinguishing number or identification mark on any motor vehicle or on any mechanical device is guilty of a crime, the term "motor vehicle" has been construed as referring to what is generally known as an automobile and nothing else;² and the term "mechanical device" has been held to apply only to automobiles and mechanical devices used on automobiles.³ Where a statute makes it a crime to remove or alter numbers or marks "upon any machine or other apparatus," it has been held that an automobile tire is a machine or other apparatus within the meaning of the statute so as to make removal or alteration of identifying numbers or marks from such tires an offense.⁴

Prosecution. In accordance with general rules, evidence offered on prosecutions for alteration or removal of identifying numbers or marks from motor vehicles has been held admissible⁵ or inadmissible,⁶ and such rules have been applied in determining the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction,⁷ and the propriety of instructions.⁸

§ 597. Assault and Battery; Aggravated Assaults

- a. In general
- b. Collision or striking
- c. Intent
- d. Proximate cause and contributory negligence

Bill of sale

In a prosecution for destroying the engine number of an alleged stolen automobile, exclusion of the bill of sale of the alleged stolen automobile is not error, where, on objection because of discrepancy in model number, defendant fails to identify the automobile described in the bill of sale as one which was stolen, and on which defendant was alleged to have altered the number.—Wolf v. State, 151 N.E. 731, 198 Ind. 261.

constitute a deadly weapon,¹⁰ when so operated as to show an intent to inflict bodily harm or death,¹¹ or operated with culpable negligence,¹² or willfully driven in a manner involving reckless disregard for the safety of others lawfully upon the highway.¹³

Injury. In order to establish the offense of assault and battery by motor vehicle, it is essential that someone be hurt, however slightly, as a result of the collision.¹⁴ The driver of a motor vehicle may be guilty of an aggravated assault under a general law by which an assault becomes aggravated when serious bodily injury is inflicted on the person assaulted.¹⁵

Statute held not invalid

Statute held not invalid, as against contention that it does not contain definition of negligence applicable to prosecutions for assault with motor vehicle—Young v. State, 47 S.W.2d 320, 120 Tex. Cr. 39.

Similar to striking with club

"Assault and battery" may be committed by striking another unlawfully with an automobile as with a club.—Keuhn v. State, 174 N.E. 606, 37 Ohio App. 217.

Former jeopardy

Under the rule that in order to constitute former jeopardy the offenses charged in a prior prosecution and in the instant one must be the same in law and in fact, a penalty imposed on a defendant for driving at an excessive rate of speed is not a prior conviction within the meaning of a plea of autrefois convict in a prosecution for assault and battery committed by striking another with his automobile at the time of the speeding for which such penalty was imposed.—State v. Albertalli, N.J. Sup., 112 A. 724.

10. Particular statutory provisions

Under statutes providing that any person who shall assault another with a gun, revolver, pistol, knife, an iron bar, a club, brass knuckles, or other dangerous weapon shall be guilty of a felony, it is not essential that the "other dangerous weapon" referred to be one of the same category or kind as those enumerated, and, therefore, an automobile may be a dangerous weapon within the meaning of the statute so as to support a conviction of a motorist who drove his car over the foot of a police officer at an intersection after telling him to get out of the way and in reckless disregard of the officer's safety.

b. Collision or Striking

An assault and battery by a motor vehicle may be committed by striking either the person of the victim or the vehicle in which he is riding.

A collision or striking by a motor vehicle is contemplated by a statute relating to the offense of assault and battery.¹⁶ An assault and battery may be committed with a motor vehicle by striking a person.¹⁷ The application of the force need not, however, be direct; nor need there be contact with the body of the person assaulted;¹⁸ the offense may be committed by striking another vehicle in or on which the victim is riding, so that injury results to him.¹⁹

The intent to injure another is an essential element of assault or assault and battery with a motor vehicle, but such intent may be inferred from conduct showing a reckless disregard for the safety of others.

One may be guilty of assault and battery when he injures another by intentionally driving his car against the person of his victim or the vehicle in which the latter is riding²⁰ and the intent to injure need not be specifically directed against the particular person who is injured.²¹ An intent to injure or its equivalent is essential to criminal responsibility for assault or assault and battery by use of a motor vehicle,²² and, in the absence of intentional performance of an illegal, reckless, or wanton act, an intention to inflict bodily injury is of the essence of the offense.²³

The intent essential to conviction of assault or assault and battery with a motor vehicle may be inferred from conduct so reckless, wanton, and willful as to show an utter disregard for human life or safety,²⁴ or from the fact that the injury is the direct result of intentional acts done under circumstances showing a reckless disregard for the safety of others and a willingness to inflict the injury,²⁵ as in the case of intentional violation of statutes regulating the operation of motor vehicles upon public highways,²⁶ and may be supplied by the commission of an unlawful act which leads directly and naturally to the injury,²⁷ unless, according to some authorities, the unlawful act is merely malum prohibitum.²⁸ The intention to injure may be inferred in law from the consequences that are naturally to be apprehended as the result of the intentional doing of a particular act,²⁹ especially where the driver's act is malum in se.³⁰ On the other hand, the essential intent may not be inferred from mere negligence on the part of the driver,³¹ from his failure to exercise ordinary care,³² or from any negligence falling short of a reckless, willful, and wanton disregard of consequences to others.³³

Speed. The speed at which a motorist is driving may, if sufficiently excessive, reveal the essential criminal intent so as to justify his conviction of an assault and battery, aggravated assault, or simis injured.—Luther v. State, 98 N.E. 640, 177 Ind. 619.

Grossly negligent use

The grossly negligent use of a potentially "dangerous instrument" like an automobile, in wanton disregard of the safety of others lawfully upon the highway, may be sufficient to warrant an inference of an intent to injure, and justify a conviction of "assault and battery"—*Commonwealth v. In Texas

(1) The rule is otherwise under a statute defining aggravated assault with a motor vehicle.—McDuffey v. State, Cr., 206 S.W.2d 601—Guajardo v. State, 139 S.W.2d 85, 139 Tex.Cr. 201.

(2) In a case decided under the law as it existed prior to the enactment of such statute, it was held that a defendant whose negligence without intent to commit an assault brought about an accident injuring another could not be convicted under the then existing statute of assault and battery and aggravated assault.—Coffey v. State, 200 S.W. 384, 82 Tex.Cr. 481.

Gross negligence

Under a statute punishing injury through gross negligence and recklessness, mere negligence is insufficient—State v. Dean, 98 So. 82, 154 La. 671.

ilar crime in injuring another person as a result of the operation of his motor vehicle;³⁴ and the intentional operation of a motor vehicle at a high rate of speed is a willful act, as distinguished from merely negligent conduct.³⁵ The mere fact that an automobile was exceeding the statutory speed limit is not, however, the controlling factor, and is only a circumstance to be considered as to whether the driver was operating the car at a rate which, under the existing conditions, was obviously dangerous.³⁶ Thus, evidence that accused was driving at a speed which is declared by statute to be prima facie unreasonable and imprudent is not in itself conclusive of his guilt;³⁷ nor does the mere fact that he was slightly exceeding a speed limit of ten miles an hour show conclusively such recklessness and willfulness as to make the act criminal when he strikes another person.³⁸

Malice, as an element of aggravated assault, may be implied from the fact that accused was operating a motor vehicle in such a manner as to be manifestly dangerous to persons lawfully using the street.³⁹

Culpable negligence. Under a statute making it assault in the third degree to operate a motor vehicle with culpable negligence to the injury of another, one may not be convicted on proof of ordinary negligence merely sufficient to support a civil action,⁴⁰ and in order to constitute culpable negligence there must be coupled with the negligent act a reckless and wanton disregard of the rights of others⁴¹ sufficient to amount to an intent to inflict the injury or at least an indifference as to whether or not the injury happened.⁴² A defendant may, however, be convicted where he was guilty of culpable negligence.⁴³ Under a statute punishing culpable negligence, such negligence consists in the omission to do an act which a reasonably careful and prudent man would do under like circumstances or the doing of some act which under like circumstances such a man would not do.⁴⁴

Intent to do great bodily harm. In a proper case the specific intent in a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily harm may be inferred from reckless negligence in the operation of a car,⁴⁵ although it has been held that such negligence will not sustain a finding of the specific intent in the absence of knowledge on the part of the driver that any person is present upon the highway or is struck by the car.⁴⁶

d. Proximate Cause and Contributory Negligence

In order to sustain a conviction of assault or assault and battery with a motor vehicle, the act of the accused need not be the sole cause of injury provided it was the proximate cause thereof. The contributory negligence of the victim may be considered but will not necessarily afford a defense.

In order to sustain a conviction, the gross negligence or recklessness of accused need not be the sole cause of the collision or accident, if it is a direct and proximate cause.⁴⁷ A defendant may be guilty, although he could not by ordinary care prevent the collision after he had discovered the danger,⁴⁸ or although the collision was accidental or unintentional,⁴⁹ if brought about by his gross or willful negligence.

The contributory negligence of the victim is not a defense to the prosecution if all elements of the offense are present;⁵⁰ but contributory negligence is a circumstance for consideration in determining whether or not all elements of the offense were present,⁵¹ and, if the heedlessness of the victim was the cause of the accident, it may, unless some flagrant conduct be shown on the part of defendant driver, absolve him from that willful or wanton disregard of the safety of others from which his intent to injure and his malice could be inferred.⁵²

§ 598. — Complaint, Information, or Indictment

General rules govern the sufficiency of complaints, indictments, and informations charging assault or assault and battery with a motor vehicle.

The general rules, as discussed in Assault and Battery §§ 103-112, control in determining the sufficiency of a complaint, indictment, or information charging assault or assault and battery by use of a motor vehicle.⁵³ The indictment is ordinarily deemed sufficient if it follows the language of the statute.⁵⁴ It has been held that allegations are sufficient, although charging defendant with "willfully committing the assault and at the same time negligently committing the same,"⁵⁵ and that, under a statute defining the offense in the disjunctive, allegations are sufficient, although stated in the conjunctive.⁵⁶

A simple assault is included within an assault with intent to do bodily injury by striking another with an automobile,⁵⁷ and an indictment or information for the latter offense will support a conviction of the former;⁵⁸ similarly, an indictment for aggravated assault and battery with a motor vehicle will support a conviction of assault and battery or of assault,⁵⁹ and an indictment purporting to charge assault with a motor vehicle with intent to kill but insufficient for this purpose may nevertheless be sufficient to authorize defendant's trial for assault and battery.⁶⁰ However, an indictment charging that defendant, with a motor vehicle as a deadly weapon, unlawfully made an assault on another with intent to commit a bodily injury on him, will not support a conviction for assault and battery, since it does not charge a battery.⁶¹

§ 599. — Issues, Proof, and Variance

A charge that the accused in committing an assault and battery with a motor vehicle acted willfully and with negligence may be supported by proof of either willfulness or gross negligence, and allegations that his car collided with the victim may be sustained by proof that it struck the victim or the vehicle in which he rode.

In accordance with general rules the allegata and the probata must agree,⁶² and under an indictment alleging assault and battery by an automobile there can be no conviction in the absence of proof that the victim was injured.⁶³ Failure to prove the name of the victim as alleged in the complaint and information has been held a fatal defect.⁶⁴ However, a charge that a motor vehicle struck a named person and proof that it struck a vehicle in which such person was riding to his injury does not present a variance,⁶⁵ and it has been held that such a charge may be sustained by proof that defendant's car struck that of a third person causing the latter to collide with the victim to his injury.⁶⁶ A charge that defendant committed an assault by means of a motor vehicle "willfully and with negligence" may be sustained by proof of either willfulness or gross negligence.⁶⁷ An allegation that an assault with a truck took place upon a highway is sufficiently supported by proof that the accident occurred upon a public highway under construction where gates across it had been opened and such portion of the highway was in general use.⁶⁸

§ 600. — Evidence

- a. Presumptions and burden of proof
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

The burden rests on the prosecution to prove the essential elements of assault or assault and battery by means of a motor vehicle; intent may be presumed from circumstances indicating reckless disregard for the safety of others.

In prosecutions for assault or assault and battery by use of a motor vehicle the burden rests on the state to prove the essential elements of the crime, such as that accused acted willfully or intentionally, or with a reckless disregard for the safety of others.⁶⁹ However, one driving at a dangerous rate of speed with a reckless disregard for the safety of others is presumed to have intended the natural and probable consequences of his act, so as to render him guilty of a criminal assault when he strikes any person.⁷⁰

General rules determine the admissibility of evidence in prosecutions for assault or assault and battery with a motor vehicle.

The general rules, as discussed in Assault and Battery §§ 115-123, ordinarily govern the admissibility of evidence in prosecutions for assault or assault and battery by use of a motor vehicle.⁷¹ In a prosecution for assault and battery committed by gross negligence in the operation of an automobile, evidence that defendant was in an intoxicated condition is admissible on the question of his negligence,⁷² and in showing the general circumstances surrounding the accident evidence is admissible that an officer took intoxicating liquor from defendant's companion.⁷³ In prosecutions of this character it is also competent to show that accused was driving in excess of the statutory speed limit,⁷⁴ and evidence of witnesses at a distance may be admissible where it tends to show that the speed was continued to the point of collision.⁷⁵ The testimony of a witness who came upon the scene of the assault soon after it had occurred is competent as to the conditions upon the ground and the wrecked condition of defendant's car, as bearing on the circumstances of the accident, and the guilt of defendant.⁷⁶ It is proper to admit evidence showing that injuries were suffered by the victim of the assault;⁷⁷ and in a prosecution for an assault by colliding with a vehicle in which persons were riding and causing injury to a person named, the fact that other persons in such vehicle were injured may properly be shown as a part of the res gestae.⁷⁸

c. Weight and Sufficiency

The guilt of one accused of assault or assault and battery by a motor vehicle must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt to warrant his conviction.

The proof must show the guilt of defendant beyond a reasonable doubt in order to convict him,⁷⁹ as for aggravated assault⁸⁰ predicated on culpable negligence.⁸¹

§ 601. — Questions of Law and Fact

Questions of fact arising in a prosecution for assault or assault and battery with a motor vehicle should be submitted to the jury on conflicting evidence.

In accordance with the general rules, as discussed in Assault and Battery § 127, on conflicting evidence it is for the jury to determine questions of fact,⁸² such as criminal intent⁸³ or intoxication.⁸⁴ In a prosecution founded on alleged gross negligence in the operation of an automobile, the negligence of defendant and the cause of the collision are questions for the jury.⁸⁵ It is a question of fact whether one is criminally negligent in undertaking to drive a motor vehicle upon the public highway at a high rate of speed when he knows that he is subject to sudden attacks of vertigo which render him unable to control a car.⁸⁶

General rules ordinarily control in respect of instructions in prosecutions for assault or assault and battery by a motor vehicle.

The general rules, as discussed in Assault and Battery § 128, govern the matter of instructions in prosecutions for assault or assault and battery with a motor vehicle,⁸⁷ subject to such differences as may arise from the nature of an assault by a motor vehicle,⁸⁸ and, in accordance with these principles, the courts have held particular instructions given or requested to be proper⁸⁹ or improper.⁹⁰ It has been held that the jury's attention may be called to a statute regulating motor vehicles, the violation of which is not of itself wantonness or gross neg-

Necessity for charge as to malice

As in the case of other crimes of like nature, in the prosecution of a defendant for aggravated assault and battery with a motor vehicle, the jury must be told that malice is essential to conviction, but they should also be told that the defendant's malice need not be expressly directed against the party injured, but may be implied from the willful and wanton operation of an automobile in a manner which manifestly and necessarily imperiled the lives and limbs of persons lawfully upon the street and showed a wanton disregard of their safety.—Commonwealth v. Ireland, 27 A.2d 746, 149 Pa.Super. 298.

88. Pa.—Commonwealth v. Ireland, supra.

Stressing intent

In ordinary assault and battery cases, where defendant's intent to inflict injury is plainly apparent, it is not necessary for trial judge in his charge to lay stress on intent, but, in automobile injuries and similar cases, intent becomes important, since the intention to commit the "assault and battery" is the very gist of the offense.—Commonwealth v. Ireland, supra.

ligence,⁹¹ although there is also authority to the contrary.⁹² The jury may properly be charged on a statutory definition of a crime or misdemeanor as consisting of a violation of a public law in which there is a union or joint operation of act and intention or criminal negligence.⁹³

§ 603. — Verdict and Findings

Acquittal of a charge of reckless driving precludes conviction under a count in the same indictment charging assault based on the theory of reckless driving.

Under an indictment which, in separate counts, charges an assault with an automobile as a deadly weapon, and operating an automobile recklessly, an acquittal of the latter charge precludes a conviction of an assault based on the theory of reckless driving.⁹⁴

§ 604. — Judgment, Sentence, and Punishment

A judgment of conviction may be sufficient, although not expressly stating that the accused is found guilty of the offense charged. Sentence and punishment should accord with the general rules.

A judgment of conviction in a prosecution for assault or assault and battery with a motor vehicle may be sufficient, although it does not state in express terms that accused is found guilty of the offense charged.⁹⁵ The propriety of the sentence and punishment imposed on conviction of an assault or assault and battery with a motor vehicle will be determined in accordance with general rules.⁹⁶

§ 605. — Appeal and Error

Under the general rules, a conviction of assault or of assault and battery with a motor vehicle will not be reversed because of rulings committed to the discretion of the trial court, or for harmless error.

Under the general rules, as discussed in Criminal Law § 1623 et seq, a conviction will not be reversed for rulings resting in the discretion of the trial court where such discretion has not been abused,⁹⁷ or for error which is not prejudicial or harmful to accused.⁹⁸

§ 606. Carrying Person in Front of Operator

An ordinance making it an offense to carry another on a motor vehicle in front of the operator thereof has been held a valid exercise of municipal police power and to apply to all persons operating motorcycles.

An ordinance making it an offense for one operating a motor vehicle to carry another person on it in front of the operator, applicable to any person operating a motorcycle, has been held to be general with respect to all persons who operate motorcycles,⁹⁹ founded on a reasonable basis,¹ and a valid exercise of the police power of the municipality.²

§ 607. Driving or Operating Unlicensed or Unregistered Vehicle

It has been broadly stated that all manner of things connected with the presence and use of motor vehicles upon the highways are embraced within the meaning of "operating" such a vehicle in violation of statutes forbidding their operation if unlicensed, and that any vehicle propelled by power other than muscular is a motor vehicle within the contemplation of the statutes.

In statutes making it an offense to operate an unlicensed motor vehicle upon the highway, the word "operate" has been construed to include attempts to operate and to embrace all matters and things connected with the presence and use of motor vehicles upon the highway, whether in motion or at rest,³ and, generally speaking, the term "motor vehicle" includes all vehicles propelled by power other than muscular power,⁴ even though they may be temporarily unable to operate on their own power.⁵ Statutes making it a crime to operate

Coasting

Acts of defendant in steering automobile, temporarily unable to be operated under its own power, and regulating its speed by applying brakes while automobile was rolling down hill from point upon public highway to which it had been pushed to point from which it was towed, were held to constitute "operation" of motor vehicle within statute prohibiting operation of unregistered motor vehicle upon public highway.—State v. Lansing, supra.

4. Vt.—State v. Lansing, supra.

5. "Tractor crane" or "truck crane"

A motor truck on which is permanently mounted a large crane and which is capable of speed of thirty miles an hour is not a "tractor crane" within statute exempting tractor cranes from license requirements, but is a "truck crane," and hence op-

a motor vehicle without a license mean operation without the appropriate license prescribed by law,⁶ and should be strictly construed.⁷ An operator of a motor vehicle may be proceeded against regardless of the fact that he is merely an agent of the owner,⁸ and, where the owner of a motor vehicle permits its improper operation by another on dealers' plates, such owner may be convicted for violation of general statutes forbidding operation of motor vehicles without the required registration despite the fact that he obtained no remuneration from the use of his vehicle.⁹

Vehicle licensed in wrong weight class. Under statutes making it an offense to operate a motor vehicle upon a public highway under a license for a class other than that to which such vehicle properly belongs, it is a violation of the statute either to under-register¹⁰ or over-register¹¹ a vehicle. There is a conflict among the authorities as to whether operation of a motor vehicle with a greater load than that called for by the license constitutes a violation of statutes of this character.¹² Some authorities hold that the operation of the vehicle with a load in excess of that for which it is licensed, in and of itself, constitutes an offense in violation of the statute,¹³ even though the license purchased corresponds to the capacity of the vehicle as rated by the manufacturer;¹⁴ but other authority has held that purchase of a license which corresponds to the rated capacity of the vehicle complies with the law regardless of the load actually carried,¹⁵ so that, where one has purchased a license corresponding with the manufacturer's rated capacity, he is not guilty of violating the statute, even though he operates the vehicle with a load in excess thereof.¹⁶ Under statutes of this character the owner is the person in whose name the vehicle is registered.¹⁷ Under reciprocity statutes an out-of-state vehicle is protected where it carries a load permitted under the license of its home state,¹⁸ but, where it carries a load in excess thereof, it is not duly registered for operation in the state of the forum and, therefore, violates the laws of the latter even after giving effect to the obligations of reciprocity.¹⁹

Permit to move contrivance dangerous to road surface. Under a statute providing that no vehicle, engine, or contrivance of whatever weight shall be moved on or over any way or bridge which has any flange, rib, clamp, or other object attached likeeration thereof without license upon public highway is in violation of statute.

ly to injure the surface of such way or bridge, without a permit, it is an offense to move over a highway without a permit a gasoline shovel of caterpillar type, the propulsive power of which is exercised by means of a flexible band, if such contrivance is so constructed that it has a flange or other object attached likely to injure the surface of the way when moved over it,²⁰ and the fact that such machines are exempted by other statutory provisions from procuring permits as to weight is immaterial,²¹ but, if such contrivance is not so constructed or equipped that its movement over the highway is likely to injure the surface, there is no violation of the statute in moving it without a permit.²²

Indictment or information. In accordance with general rules, an indictment or information under such statutes must allege every fact necessary to constitute the offense charged and to bring accused within the statutory provisions.²³ Indictments or informations charging the operation of unregistered vehicles need not negative the exceptions made by the statute in favor of nonresidents;²⁴ nor is it necessary to set forth in the indictment or information matters of defense only,²⁵ or facts of which the court will take judicial notice.²⁶ Under a statute which forbids the operation of a motor vehicle anywhere in the state without its having been registered, an indictment need not charge that the operation complained of was upon a street, road, highway, or other public thoroughfare.²⁷

Under a charge of operating a motor vehicle not properly registered a defendant may not be convicted on proof that, while the vehicle had been properly registered, the license plates thereon were actually those of the former owner.²⁸

Evidence and trial. General rules apply in prosecutions for violations of such statutes,²⁹ and in accordance therewith proof beyond a reasonable doubt is required to sustain a conviction.³⁰

§ 608. Driving or Using without Required Lights or with Improper Lights

Statutes sometimes create offenses with respect to lights to be used or displayed on motor vehicles.

proaching from the opposite direction,³² or which have not been tested or approved by particular agencies.³³ While a statute or ordinance requiring specified lights on motor vehicles upon streets and highways does not apply to vehicles left standing at the side of streets or highways,³⁴ other statutes are applicable to parked vehicles.³⁵ Failure to have a motor vehicle equipped with reflectors does not constitute an offense where the omission occurs in the daytime and the statutory requirement, as to reflectors, applies only between sunset and sunrise.³⁶

Under a statute providing that every motor vehicle while in use during certain hours shall display certain lights, the person in control of the motor vehicle at the time of its use and violation of the statute is responsible,³⁷ and, if such person is the owner, he alone is liable.³⁸ While criminal intent is an essential element of the offense of driving without proper lights,³⁹ this intent is merely an intent to do the act which results in the violation of the law, and not an intent to commit the crime itself.⁴⁰ Where specific criminal intent is not made an essential element of the offense by the terms of such statutes, proof thereof is generally held to be unnecessary to sustain a conviction,⁴¹ and where such act is done voluntarily and deliberately, the offense cannot be said to have been committed by misfortune or accident: within the meaning of a statutory provision that a person shall not be found guilty of any crime or misdemeanor committed by "misfortune or accident."⁴² Where the lights on a vehicle become suddenly extinguished, it is the duty of the driver to stop and not drive further upon a public highway.⁴³

Appeal and error. Where there was competent and relevant evidence to support a finding against accused, which was based on conflicting evidence, the appellate court will not consider the credibility of the witnesses and the contradictions in their testimony.⁴⁴

§ 609. Driving Recklessly; Endangering Public

- b. Essentials of, and acts constituting, offense

a. General Considerations

Various statutes, the validity of which has been upheld, have defined the offense of reckless driving.

The reckless operation of a motor vehicle in a public place is punishable under some statutes, the statutes, although varying somewhat in the description of the offense, being alike as to its gist, which lies in reckless driving.⁴⁵ It has been held

Nature or grade of offense

(2) It is a misdemeanor and not one of the minor offenses dealt with summarily by magistrates.—People v. Grogan, 183 N.E. 273, 260 N.Y. 138, 86 A.L.R. 1266—People v. Rosenthal, supra—People v. Sandner, 229 N.Y.S. 545, 162 Misc. 41.

(3) It has also been stated that the offense of reckless driving is not of the grade above a misdemeanor.—People ex rel. Cooley v. Wilder, 255 N.Y.S. 218, 234 App.Div. 256.

Repeal of statute

(1) The statute, penalizing operation of motor vehicle upon state highways recklessly or so as to endanger property, or the life or limb, of any person was repealed by subsequent statute, defining and penalizing reckless driving.—Flournoy v. State, 2 So.2d 329, 30 Ala.App. 154—Anthony v. State, 186 So. 185, 28 Ala.App. 415—Pate v. State, 143 So. 208, 25 Ala.App. 208.

(2) In such case a prosecution or conviction under the repealed statute was regarded as improper and ineffective.—Flournoy v. State, supra—Anthony v. State, supra—Pate v. State, supra.

(3) Act amending repealing clause of act which repealed conflicting provisions of act providing for regulation of traffic upon highways, so as to repeal all conflicting laws or parts thereof, "especially all provisions of" certain acts "in conflict herewith," repealed merely conflicting provisions of enumerated statutes, and hence did not repeal provision of one of them making it misdemeanor to injure person by gross recklessness in operating automobile.—State v. Dietrich, 162 So. 186, 182 La. 581.

Operation in careful and prudent manner

In a case in which a conviction under a municipal ordinance was upheld, it was stated that a prosecution will lie for violation of ordi-

that the act of driving recklessly so as to injure persons upon the highway is an offense under a statute penalizing a breach of the peace by "tumultuous and offensive carriage."⁴⁶ It has, however, been held that there can be no conviction of operating a motor vehicle at such a reckless speed as to endanger the safety of others under a municipal ordinance which was clearly intended to apply only to those conveyances which are drawn by horses, mules, or other beasts.⁴⁷

Offenses under statutes which refer solely to speed and which do not characterize excessive speed as reckless driving are considered infra §§ 641-650, notwithstanding such statutes may be referred to as "reckless-driving" statutes.

Validity of regulation. The validity of statutes defining the offense of reckless driving,⁴⁸ or the offense of operating a motor vehicle in a manner which would endanger the lives or safety of the public,⁴⁹ has been upheld, on the ground that such a statute constitutes a valid exercise of the police power,⁵⁰ and as against the objection that the particular statute is vague, uncertain, or indefinite,⁵¹ that it penalizes a mere state of mind,⁵² or that it violates a constitutional provision that accused shall be fully and plainly informed of the character and cause of the accusation.⁵³ A municipal ordinance penalizing reckless driving has been declared invalid, however, on the ground that the subject is of state-wide concern and that the legislature had appropriated the field by the enactment of a penal statute applicable to reckless driving.⁵⁴

Distinct offenses. While it has been held that accused cannot be convicted of reckless driving for a failure to turn to the right when signaled from the rear by one desiring to pass where such conduct constitutes a distinct offense differently punishable,⁵⁵ the view has apparently been taken that the fact that making a left turn without signaling constitutes the violation of a specific statute in that regard does not necessarily prevent a prosecution based on such act under the reckless-driving statute.⁵⁶ Under some circumstances the same act may constitute a violation of a statute directed against reckless driving and also a violation of a municipal ordinance directed against speeding.⁵⁷ Some statutes penalize as distinct offenses the act of driving a motor vehicle recklessly and the operation of such a vehicle in a manner so as to endanger the lives or safety of the public,⁵⁸ and a person may commit such offenses at the same time.⁵⁹

Under some statutes the offense of reckless driving or operation,⁶⁰ or the offense of operation so as to endanger the property, life, or limb of any person,⁶¹ is distinct from the offense of driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, and, even though a statute penalizes the operation of a motor vehicle recklessly or while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, so that the lives or safety of the public is in danger, the act of reckless driving is a distinct offense and is punishable without regard to whether or not the person is intoxicated.⁶²

The statutory offense of operating a motor vehicle negligently, so that the lives or safety of the public might be in danger, is separate and distinct from the offense of manslaughter,⁶³ even though both offenses originate in the same act.⁶⁴ Where a statute which prohibits reckless driving defines the offense separately with respect to speed permitted in specified areas, each provision creates a separate offense independent of the other and is punishable as such.⁶⁵

b. Essentials of, and Acts Constituting, Offense

The essential elements of the offense of reckless or dangerous driving, as prescribed by the statute or other regulation defining the offense, must exist in order to render a person guilty of the offense. Usually the determination of guilt is to be made in the light of the surrounding circumstances.

The elements which constitute the offense of reckless driving depend largely on the statutory definition of the offense,⁶⁶ and, in order to render a person guilty of reckless or dangerous driving, the essential elements as prescribed by the statute or other regulation defining the offense must exist.⁶⁷ Under some statutes the operation charged must have been upon a highway or in a place to which the public has access in order to render accused guilty,⁶⁸ and interference with the free and proper use of the highway or endangering of users of the highway must be unreasonable.⁶⁹

Any one of several specified acts, omissions, or manners of driving may constitute the offense,⁷⁰ and the designation "reckless driving" in some of the statutes is merely a name for the offense.⁷¹ Accused must have done something more than merely commit an error of judgment,⁷² or something more than merely make a mistake while learning to operate a motor vehicle.⁷³ The fact that the conduct of accused might render him liable in a civil action for damages is not in itself sufficient to render him guilty of reckless driving.⁷⁴ Among particular acts or types of conduct which have been regarded as not in themselves rendering accused guilty of reckless driving are mere violation of a traffic regulation,⁷⁵ evasion of a red light,⁷⁶ failure to use chains,⁷⁷ and driving a vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.⁷⁸ It has been said, however, that reckless driving may be based on violations of rules of the road,⁷⁹ although all such violations may not be reckless driving.⁸⁰

Nature of vehicle

A trolley bus was not a "motor vehicle," within meaning of the section of a municipal code providing that, whoever operates a motor vehicle without due regard for safety and right of pedestrians and drivers and occupants of other vehicles, and so as to endanger life, limb, or property, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and conviction could not be had thereunder of one operating a trolley bus.—City of Dayton v. Purpose of statute

Reckless driving statute was enacted for the protection of other motorists, pedestrians, and property upon the highway.—Gause v. State, Miss., 34 So.2d 729.

Highway partially closed

Where the state has duly closed a highway to the public and has provided a detour, the portion so closed is not a highway, and a conviction for allegedly reckless driving thereon is not permissible.—Commonwealth v. Diehl, 35 Pa. Dist. & Co. 503

In Pennsylvania

(1) It has been held that the statute, providing that reckless driving shall include "any person who drives any vehicle . . . upon a highway carelessly and wilfully, or wantonly disregarding the rights or safety of others, or in a manner so as to endanger any person or property," describes but a single offense and that the gravamen of such offense is wilfully or wantonly endangering any person or property.—Commonwealth v. Michalis, 43 Pa. Dist. & Co. 221.

(2) The view has been taken that such statute does not define three separate offenses but, at most, defines two acts which would constitute reckless driving.—Commonwealth v. Frisch, 41 Pa. Dist. & Co. 266, 57 Montg. Co. 158—Commonwealth v. Trisch, 41 Pa. Dist. & Co. 221—Commonwealth v. Shriver, 35 Pa. Dist. & Co. 1.

(3) The view has also been expressed that such statute describes three phases of one offense rather than three separate and distinct offenses.—Commonwealth v. Kline, 35 Pa. Dist. & Co. 19—Commonwealth v. Douglas, 31 Pa. Dist. & Co. 231.

in excess of the speed limit, as discussed infra § 610, the question whether the offense has been committed must usually be determined in the light of the surrounding circumstances in the case of the offense of operating a motor vehicle recklessly or heedlessly,⁸¹ or in such a manner as to endanger the lives and safety of the public.⁸² Accordingly, in determining the guilt of accused, his manner of driving has to be considered with respect to the time when,⁸³ and place where,⁸⁴ the alleged violation occurred, the condition of the vicinity as to light or darkness,⁸⁵ the width of the highway,⁸⁶ the amount of traffic thereon at the time,⁸⁷ the position of other vehicles,⁸⁸ the right of way as between vehicles,⁸⁹ the condition of the motor vehicle and the brakes with which it is equipped,⁹⁰ the weight of the vehicle,⁹¹ the opportunity for observation,⁹² the chance of being able to stop or avoid a collision,⁹³ and driving by accused while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.⁹⁴

Accident or injury. Under some statutes, it is essential that an accident or injury should occur in order to render accused guilty.⁹⁵ Under other statutes, however, it is not essential that a person should be injured in order to constitute the offense.⁹⁶ Conversely, the mere fact that an accident or collision occurred does not render accused guilty of reckless driving.⁹⁷

Speed. Subject to the effect of a statute making the operation of an automobile in excess of a specified rate of speed an offense of reckless or dangerous driving, as discussed infra § 610, recklessness or heedlessness in the operation of a motor vehicle is not determined alone by the rate of speed or velocity with which a car is traveling,⁹⁸ and the fact alone that the vehicle is operated at a high rate of speed does not constitute reckless operation.⁹⁹ However, the question of speed may be an important element in determining whether the driving of the person charged was reckless or dangerous,¹ and is one of the many circumstances that may be considered in connection with the issues of each case.² Mere speed in excess of that allowed by statute is not of itself sufficient to render accused guilty of reckless driving under some statutes;³ reckless or dangerous driving may be established without regard to the speed limit.⁴ So, one may be guilty of reckless driving, although traveling at less than the rate permitted by the speed regulations,⁵ where a statute provides that driving in excess of a certain speed shall be presumptive evidence of driving at a speed which is not careful and prudent, merely exceeding such speed does not render accused guilty where it appears that under the circumstances the rate of speed was not reckless or imprudent.⁶

Prosecutions for exceeding lawful speed are discussed generally infra §§ 641-650.

§ 610. — Exceeding Lawful Speed Distinguished

Under some statutes a person may be guilty of the offense of speeding without being guilty of the offense of reckless driving, but other statutes or regulations constitute operation in excess of a specified speed reckless or dangerous driving.

In view of the method of defining the offense, under some statutes, a person may be guilty of the offense of speeding without being guilty of the offense of reckless driving,⁷ but under other statutes or regulations, the act of unlawful speeding itself constitutes reckless or dangerous driving.⁸ Some statutes or regulations which in terms render the operation of a motor vehicle in excess of specified rates of speed a violation of the statute or regulation do not, however, restrict the application of the statute to acts of unlawful speeding,⁹ and a person may drive recklessly or heedlessly without necessarily driving with excessive speed,¹⁰ although of course, if one does exceed the speed limit under such a statute or regulation, he commits the offense of reckless or dangerous driving.¹¹ Prosecutions for exceeding lawful speed are discussed generally infra §§ 641-650.

§ 611. — Intent

The willful or wanton disregard for the safety or rights of persons or for the safety of property is an element of the offense of reckless driving. The intent with which the act was done, or knowledge or ignorance of its criminal character, is not material.

Under some statutes, the willful or wanton disregard for the safety or rights of persons or for the safety of property is an element of the offense of reckless driving;¹² the recklessness contemplated has been regarded as an intentional course of conduct wholly disregarding of the rights of others,¹³ and "reckless" has been regarded as meaning a disregard of the consequences which may ensue from the act and indifference to the rights of others.¹⁴ In order to render accused guilty, a guilty mind, in the sense of an active intent, is not essential.¹⁵ Intent refers or relates to dis-

Intention or indifference

Conduct of a truck driver is "willful and wanton" within reckless driving criminal statute if he willfully intends to inflict injury or is reckless or indifferent to consequences.—Riggs v. Watson, Ga.App., 47 S.E.2d 900.

Knowledge

(1) The statute defining "reckless driving" as driving in such a manner as to indicate either a willful or wanton disregard for the safety of persons or property means conscious and intentional driving which the driver knows, or should know, creates an unreasonable risk of harm to others.

Iowa.—State v. Hill, 32 N.W.2d 398. Minn.—State v. Bolsinger, 21 N.W.2d 480, 221 Minn. 151.

(2) "Wantonness" includes the elements of consciousness of one's conduct, intent to do or omit the act in question, realization of the probable injury to another, and reckless disregard of consequences.—People v. McNutt, 105 P.2d 657, 40 Cal.App.2d Supp. 835.

(3) One driving automobile in manner showing wanton and reckless disregard of possible consequences to persons or property may be found guilty of reckless driving, even though it may not be a fact, and so he may not know, that probable result of such driving would be to regard of safety and not merely to the act done in disregard of safety.¹⁶ So a statute penalizing the operation of a motor vehicle so as to endanger the lives or safety of the public places the burden on the individual of ascertaining at his peril whether his conduct comes within the scope of the statute¹⁷ and the question of the intent with which the act was done¹⁸ or the knowledge or ignorance of its criminal character¹⁹ is immaterial on the question of guilt, since it is the act of operating a motor vehicle in violation of the statute which constitutes the offense.²⁰

Under a regulation which penalizes reckless or dangerous driving and prohibits the owner of a motor vehicle, who is riding therein, from causing or permitting such vehicle to be operated in violation of the regulation, the offense is complete if the owner while a passenger either causes or permits the commission of the offense, regardless of the owner's knowledge or intent.²¹

§ 612. — Negligence

In a prosecution for reckless or dangerous driving, under some statutes, mere negligence of accused does not render him guilty, but negligence comes within the definition of "reckless driving" contained in other statutes.

Under some statutes, "reckless driving" means more than mere negligence,²² or want of ordinary care,²³ and mere negligence of accused does not render him guilty.²⁴ Even gross negligence does not necessarily render accused guilty,²⁵ unless it is of such a character as to evince a willful or wanton disregard for the safety of persons or property upon highways.²⁶ However, reckless driving may sometimes be based on negligence,²⁷ or so-called "wanton negligence."²⁸ According to some decisions, a person may be guilty of reckless driving, even though he did not see anyone upon the street,²⁹ and even though he exercised all possible care after the specific danger was actually discovered.³⁰

In the absence of a provision indicating the contrary, under a statute penalizing the operation of a motor vehicle so that the lives or safety of the public might be endangered, criminal liability does not depend on negligence³¹ or want of care.³² Under a statute defining "reckless driving" as driving in such a manner as to endanger or inconvenience unnecessarily other users of the highway, the view apparently has been taken that gross negligence, in the sense of want of even slight injure person or property.—People v. Nowell, 114 P.2d 81, 45 Cal.App.2d Supp. 811.

(4) However, a motorist was held not guilty where there was nothing to show that motorist was guilty of deliberate, intentional, or wanton conduct with knowledge or appreciation of the fact that danger was likely to result.—People v. Thompson, 108 P.2d 105, 41 Cal.App.2d Supp. 965.

care, is not essential.³³ It has been held that, in order to render accused guilty of the offense of unlawfully and with gross negligence driving a motor vehicle and colliding with and causing injury to a person, the gross negligence need not be the sole cause of the collision.³⁴

§ 613. — Person or Property Endangered

According to some, but not all, authorities, a statute prohibiting reckless driving is not violated where there are neither persons nor property upon the highway susceptible to injury.

On the theory that the general purpose of all laws regulating traffic is not primarily to protect the fast driver from the consequences of his own folly, but rather to protect the life and property of others lawfully using the highways,³⁵ the view has been taken that there can be no violation of a provision prohibiting reckless driving where there were neither persons nor property upon the highway to be injured.³⁶ The identity of a person who is struck by the vehicle of accused is not an element of the offense of reckless driving under some statutes.³⁷ However, according to other authority, a person might be guilty of reckless driving, although no one was upon the street at the time,³⁸ and, under a statute directed against the operation of a vehicle so as to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person lawfully using the highway, the words "any person" include a person who, with the driver's consent, is an occupant of the vehicle which is being driven in violation of the statute,³⁹ but there is not a violation of the statute where the person injured is, at the time of the injury, unlawfully using the highway.⁴⁰

§ 614. — Persons Liable

A person may commit the offense of reckless driving notwithstanding he is not actually in control of the motor vehicle.

It has been held that a person may commit the offense of reckless driving, even though not actually in control of the motor vehicle at the time of the alleged violation.⁴¹ Under a governmental regulation which penalizes reckless or dangerous driving and prohibits the owner of a motor vehicle, who is riding therein, from causing or permitting such vehicle to be operated in violation of the regulation, the offense is complete if the owner, while a passenger, either causes or permits the commission of the offense by his chauffeur,⁴² irrespective of the owner's knowledge or intent, as shown supra § 611.

§ 615. — Defenses

In a prosecution for reckless or dangerous driving, the negligence of a person who was injured or who was the driver of a motor vehicle with which accused's vehicle collided does not constitute a defense; nor does the fact that such driver was guilty of a like offense constitute a defense.

The negligence of a person injured is not a defense either to the charge of reckless driving⁴³ or of operating a motor vehicle so that the lives or safety of the public might be endangered;⁴⁴ nor is the fact that the person injured was operating an automobile without a license.⁴⁵ So, also, it is not a defense to a charge of reckless driving that the driver of a motor vehicle with which the vehicle driven by accused collided was negligent⁴⁶ or was guilty of a like offense.⁴⁷

The fact that accused when in a position of peril committed an error of judgment as to distance does not constitute a defense to a charge of operating a motor vehicle in a manner which might endanger the lives and safety of the public.⁴⁸ In a prosecution for driving a motor vehicle unlawfully and with gross negligence, the fact that accused at the time of collision with another and after the danger was discovered could not, by the use

In a prosecution for unlawful and reckless driving in violation of a municipal ordinance, in which it was said that a person who was injured seemed to have exercised the ordinary care of a pedestrian crossing a city street, the view was stated that a pedestrian entering street crossing, exercising ordinary care, has right to continue to cross, exercising such care, and is not obliged to run, jump, or dodge traffic—Keuhn v. State, 174 N.E. 606, 37 Ohio App. 217.

of ordinary care, have avoided the collision does not necessarily constitute a defense;⁴⁹ nor does the fact that in such case the collision occurred by accident or without intent.⁵⁰ Where a regulation imposes liability on the owner of a car who while riding therein permits it to be operated recklessly or dangerously, it is no defense that the owner did not give attention to the manner in which his chauffeur was driving the car and did not know whether it was going fast or not.⁵¹

The fact that the reckless driving was the result of an attempt by accused to elude an officer trying to serve a warrant on him does not necessarily constitute a defense,⁵² but the fact that the allegedly reckless driving was the result of compulsion and duress, in that certain police officers, in attempting unlawfully to arrest accused, had ambushed and fired on him, has been held to constitute a defense.⁵³

The question what court has jurisdiction of a prosecution for reckless driving depends on the local practice and statutes.

The question what court has jurisdiction of a prosecution for reckless driving depends on the local statutes and practice.⁵⁴ A children's court, having jurisdiction to try offenses committed by adults where such offenses necessarily involve a child, does not thereby have jurisdiction over an adult for a violation of an ordinance prohibiting reckless driving merely because a child was injured as a result of the act.⁵⁵

In some jurisdictions, accused does not necessarily waive a defect in process in a summary prosecution for reckless driving by waiving a summary hearing and giving bond to appear in court.⁵⁶ Process is not fatally defective in such case where accused has received all necessary information and has voluntarily submitted to the jurisdiction of the court, notwithstanding the purported copy of the information, which is mailed to accused, is not an exact or full copy of the original.⁵⁷

§ 617. — Indictment, Information, or Complaint

- a. General considerations
- b. Following language of statute
- c. Particular averments
- d. Waiver of defects

a. General Considerations

Generally speaking, a charge for reckless, dangerous, or careless driving must set forth the essential elements of the offense.

While it has been held or recognized that a charge for reckless driving filed in a justice's court or other court of inferior or limited jurisdiction need not be drawn with the same technical accuracy as an indictment,⁵⁸ and that a charge which states the facts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language and in such a manner as to enable accused to know and understand what is intended by the charge is sufficient,⁵⁹ generally speaking, all the essential elements of the crime as defined by statute or other regulation must be alleged⁶⁰ with certainty and precision⁶¹ and not by inference.⁶² While the accusation need not be in any particular form or set of words,⁶³ there must be at least a substantial statement of the offense charged,⁶⁴ and the facts must be set forth with such accuracy that accused may know the offense which it is claimed that he has committed, and so enable him to prepare his defense.⁶⁵

A charge merely for "reckless driving" is fatally defective on its face because it does not charge an offense, in the absence of any definite provision of law making "reckless driving" an offense.⁶⁶ A charge does not state an offense where it is based on a statute which was repealed when the alleged offense was committed.⁶⁷ Failure of the person who makes the affidavit on which the case is prosecuted to allege that he has probable cause to believe, and does believe, the matters alleged may render the affidavit insufficient under some statutes.⁶⁸ Where the information does not state facts showing the commission of an offense by accused, no jurisdiction is acquired by the court to hear and determine the cause⁶⁹ and accused cannot be called on to make any defense.⁷⁰

Title of action. Where a prosecution for the violation of a municipal ordinance prohibiting reckless driving is in the nature of a criminal action it must, by virtue of express statutory provision in some jurisdictions, be brought in the name of the people of the state.⁷¹ However, the fact that the action was brought in the name of a municipality will not be fatal, under a statute rendering defects immaterial if they do not prejudice the substantial rights of defendant, where the nature of the action was well understood by the parties.⁷² It has been held that a prosecution for reckless driving in the District of Columbia is properly maintained in the name of the District by the corporation counsel.⁷³

Conjunctive allegation. Under a statute punishing the operation of a motor vehicle in such a manner that the lives or safety of the public might be endangered, the offense may be charged in the conjunctive as operating it so that the lives and safety of the public might be endangered.⁷⁴

Conviction under indictment for manslaughter or assault and battery. In some jurisdictions accused may not be convicted for reckless driving on a trial under an indictment for involuntary manslaughter or for assault and battery, since reckless driving is not an indictable offense and is punishable only on summary conviction.⁷⁵

b. Following Language of Statute

While charges for reckless driving which follow, substantially or specifically, the language of some statutes defining the offense may be sufficient, a charge in the language of the statute is not necessarily sufficient.

Under some statutes, an indictment or complaint for reckless or dangerous driving is sufficient if it embodies in substance the words of the statute creating the offense,⁷⁶ or if it follows the exact language of the statute.⁷⁷ A charge in the language of the statute in some jurisdictions is not necessarily sufficient, however,⁷⁸ as, for example, where the allegations do not charge, expressly or by necessary implication, every fact necessary to constitute the offense,⁷⁹ do not inform accused of the nature of the charge against him so as to enable him to prepare his defense,⁸⁰ or are not sufficiently definite to be the basis of a bar to further prosecution.⁸¹

Where a statute contains a provision that persons operating motor vehicles shall exercise due care and take proper precaution to insure the safety of lives and property and contains subdivisions referring to specific violations, it has been held that a complaint following the language of the general provisions of the statute is not sufficient to charge an offense but it is necessary to allege also that accused committed some act in violation of one or more of the several specific provisions of the statute.⁸²

Under some statutes a charge for reckless driving must allege the acts that constitute the alleged violation of the statute and must allege the manner and effect of operation where such manner and effect are elements of the offense.

A charge for reckless driving under some statutes must state the acts that constitute the alleged violation of the statute.⁸³ In a prosecution under a statute or other regulation prohibiting the reckless or dangerous driving of motor vehicles, however, it is not essential that the charge contain an allegation as to the rate of speed prohibited⁸⁴ or the motive power of the vehicle,⁸⁵ and, under a definition of reckless driving contained in some statutes, allegations may be sufficient without any allegation as to speed.⁸⁶ However, where the prosecution is under a statute which prohibits careless or imprudent driving and makes the operation of a motor vehicle in excess of a stated speed for a specified distance a prima facie violation of the statute, an information which merely charges that accused was driving in excess of the speed fixed in the statute without alleging that he was driving carelessly or at the excessive speed for the distance required by the statute charges no offense.⁸⁷

It has been held or recognized that it is essential to allege the manner and effect of operation where such manner and effect are essential elements of the offense of reckless driving.⁸⁸ So, it has been held under a statute prohibiting the operation of a motor vehicle in a careless or negligent manner that the particular manner of driving alleged to be a violation of the statute must be set forth,⁸⁹ and that a complaint which merely alleges the offense in the language of the statute is insufficient in that it does not sufficiently show wherein defendant's operation of the car was careless or negligent.⁹⁰ However, where the prosecution is under a statute which provides that no person shall operate a motor vehicle recklessly or so as to endanger the life or limb of any person, a larize wherein accused was guilty of reckless driving does not render the information insufficient.—Commonwealth v. Michaels, 43 Pa. Dist. & Co. 221—Commonwealth v. Puff, 42 Pa. Dist. & Co. 603.

In Pennsylvania

(1) It has been held that an information under the reckless-driving statute was insufficient where it failed to allege carelessness, willfulness, or wantonness with respect to accused's operation of vehicle, the disregard of the rights or safety of others, or the endangering of any person or property.—Commonwealth v. Alford, 41 Pa. Dist. & Co. 475—Commonwealth v. Fye, 40 Pa. Dist. & Co. 508.

(2) It has also been held, however, that an information, charging reckless driving, which sets forth that defendant operated a motor vehicle "in such a manner as to endanger the lives and property of other people" is sufficient, and that it is not necessary, under a proper interpretation of the statute, that the words "carelessly, willfully, or wantonly disregarding the rights or safety of others" be set forth.—Commonwealth v. Greene, 40 Pa. Dist. & Co. 546, 57 Montg. 68.

89. Vt.—State v. Aaron, 97 A. 659, 90 Vt. 183.

90. Vt.—State v. Aaron, supra.

complaint which alleges that the acts were done unlawfully and recklessly is sufficiently descriptive of the manner in which defendant drove his motor vehicle so as to charge an offense under the statute.⁹¹

Person or property endangered. An accusation, under a statute prohibiting the operation of an automobile "so as to endanger the life and limb of persons and the safety of property," must allege what person or property was endangered by the running of the automobile, and a charge which merely alleges the offense in the language of the statute is on this ground insufficient and subject to special demurrer.⁹² It has been held, however, that, in a prosecution for reckless driving by passing through a red light and striking a pedestrian, it is not essential to allege the identity of the pedestrian.⁹³

Place of offense. It is ordinarily sufficient to allege the place where an offense is said to have been committed with particularity enough to show jurisdiction over it,⁹⁴ but, where the act is criminal only when done at a particular place, the place becomes a matter of essential description, and must be alleged with reasonable certainty.⁹⁵ Thus, where the act of operating an automobile carelessly is a crime only where it is done on a way laid out by statutory authority, it is not sufficient to charge the offense as having been committed in a named city and upon a public highway laid out by authority of statute,⁹⁶ but the particular street referred to should be alleged by name.⁹⁷ So, it may be necessary to allege the place of commission of the offense charged in order to give accused sufficient information to prepare his defense and to constitute the charge the basis of a bar to further prosecution.⁹⁸

Referring to statute or other regulation. A reference to a statute which is fairly comprehensible is sufficient,⁹⁹ and a mere inaccuracy in a reference to a statute or ordinance, when not misleading, is not ground for dismissal of the charge¹ and does not render a conviction ineffective.² Where a statute provides that all courts in the city shall take judicial notice of city ordinances, an ordinance prohibiting reckless driving need not be specially pleaded.³

d. Waiver of Defects

A plea of guilty does not waive jurisdictional defects in the charge and does not bar a motion in arrest of judgment based on a claim that the charge does not state facts constituting an offense.

A plea of guilty to an information does not waive jurisdictional defects,⁴ such as where the information fails to set forth an offense,⁵ and such a plea is no bar to a motion in arrest of judgment based on the ground that the facts stated in the information do not constitute a crime.⁶

§ 618. — Issues, Proof, and Variance

Only evidence of such facts as are within the charge is admissible on behalf of the prosecution.

In a prosecution for operating a motor vehicle so as to endanger the lives or safety of the public, the only fact to be determined is whether accused did the prohibited act, and this is the issue raised under the indictment.⁷ A conviction for reckless driving may be sustained without proof of the rate of speed prohibited by an ordinance,⁸ and, where city courts are required by statute to take judicial notice of municipal ordinances, an ordinance prohibiting reckless driving need not be proved.⁹

The evidence must sustain the charge as made,¹⁰ and generally speaking only evidence of facts which are within the range and scope of the charge is admissible on behalf of the prosecution.¹¹ There is no fatal variance between a charge that a motor vehicle ran into a team and proof showing that it ran into an express wagon,¹² but, where the evidence tended to prove a violation of a part of the statute relating to reckless driving and the charge was under another provision of the statute, there could be no conviction for reckless driving.¹³

§ 619. — Evidence

- a. Presumptions and burden of proof
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

The burden is on the prosecution to prove the offense of reckless or dangerous driving beyond a reasonable doubt. Driving at excessive speed may, under some circumstances, authorize an inference of reckless driving, but, under some statutes, such driving merely raises a presumption of imprudent driving which may be rebutted.

In accordance with the general rule applicable in criminal prosecutions, as discussed in Criminal Law § 566, the burden is on the prosecution to prove the commission of an offense of reckless or dangerous driving beyond a reasonable doubt,¹⁴ but in general accused has the burden of presenting evidence tending to establish a defense.¹⁵ While inferences may be indulged with respect to reckless driving,¹⁶ as, for example, the inference of reckless driving from proof of excessive speed under the circumstances,¹⁷ where a statute provides that driving in excess of a certain speed shall be presumptive evidence of driving at a speed which is not careful and prudent, mere proof that accused exceeded the prescribed speed simply raises the presumption of imprudent driving which may be overcome by evidence,¹⁸ or, as sometimes stated, merely shifts the burden of proof so as to require accused to show that under the circumstances he was not driving in a careless or imprudent manner.¹⁹

Generally evidence of all facts which are connected with the occurrence is admissible in a prosecution for reckless or dangerous driving, but, the evidence must be of facts which are relevant and material.

The principles governing the admissibility of evidence in criminal cases generally, as discussed in Criminal Law §§ 600-899, app'y in prosecutions for reckless or dangerous driving.²⁰ Broadly speaking, all the facts connected with the incident are pertinent and evidence of such facts is admissible.²¹ Evidence of facts which are irrelevant and immaterial is not admissible, however,²² and, where the prosecution is under a statute which prohibits careless or imprudent driving and provides that driving in excess of a certain speed is a violation of the statute and the charge is for exceeding the prescribed speed, the question as to whether the machine was being operated in a careful manner under the circumstances is properly excluded.²³ So, it is proper to exclude evidence calling for conclusions which are solely within the province of the jury²⁴ or evidence which would be purely specu-

c. Weight and Sufficiency

The evidence in a prosecution for reckless or dangerous driving must be sufficient to establish the guilt of accused beyond a reasonable doubt.

Under the rules applicable in criminal prosecutions generally, the evidence in a prosecution for reckless or dangerous driving must be sufficient to establish the guilt of accused beyond a reasonable doubt.²⁸ A conviction must be based on substantial evidence,²⁹ and cannot rest on mere speculation or supposition.³⁰ In order to authorize or support a conviction, the evidence must show more than a mere error of judgment³¹ or, under some statutes, more than mere negligence,³² on the part of accused, and, under some statutes, the evidence must establish beyond a reasonable doubt that accused failed to exercise the care of a reasonably prudent man and thus unreasonably endangered users of the highway.³³

Under some statutes or ordinances, mere proof that accused did not drive as a reasonably prudent and cautious man is not necessarily sufficient to authorize a conviction,³⁴ and mere evidence that an accident or collision occurred is not sufficient.³⁵ In order to authorize a conviction under a statute providing that a person shall be guilty of reckless driving if he drives upon a highway in a manner to indicate either a willful or a wanton disregard for the safety of persons or property, there must be such evidentiary relation between the manner of driving and the described state of mind, that is to say, willful or wanton disregard for the safety of persons or property, as to permit the inference by the judge or jury of such state of mind from the manner of driving;³⁶ under such statute, evidence which indicates to the judge or jury beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a willful or wanton disregard for the safety of persons or property is sufficient to show guilt.³⁷

Proof of speed so excessive as to constitute proof of the essential elements of the offense of reckless driving may be sufficient to support a conviction.³⁸ However, where a statute, which declares that every person operating a motor vehicle shall drive it in a careful and prudent manner and at a rate of speed so as not to endanger the property of another or the life or limb of any person, provides that the driving in excess of a specified speed shall be presumptive evidence of driving which is not careful and prudent, mere evidence of speed in excess of the prescribed speed is not sufficient to authorize or sustain a conviction, but there should be evidence of other facts and circumstances showing that this rate of speed was reckless and that the person or property of others were being endangered.³⁹

The offense of reckless driving and the offense of driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquors are established by different evidence.⁴⁰ While evidence of intoxication may bear on the question whether accused is guilty of reckless driving,⁴¹ it does not necessarily prove such driving.⁴²

§ 620. — Questions of Law and Fact

In a prosecution for reckless or dangerous driving questions of fact and the guilt or innocence of accused are determinable by the jury or other trier of the facts where the evidence is sufficient to raise issues of fact.

In a prosecution for reckless or dangerous driving in which the evidence is conflicting or is such as to authorize varying inferences and is generally sufficient to authorize the consideration of matters involved as questions of fact, it is the province of the jury or other trier of the facts to determine all questions of fact and the guilt or innocence of accused.⁴³ Accordingly, where there is sufficient evidence to sustain a verdict of guilty, it is not error for the court to refuse to direct a verdict for accused,⁴⁴ or to refuse to grant ac-

In a prosecution for reckless or dangerous driving, the court should submit the case to the jury with full and accurate instructions applicable to the issues.

In accordance with the rules applicable to instructions in criminal prosecutions generally, as discussed in Criminal Law §§ 1189-1323, the court, in a prosecution for reckless or dangerous driving, should submit the case to the jury with full and accurate instructions applicable to the issues,⁴⁸ and, since the case is for the jury on the whole evidence, the court is under no obligations to select a part of the evidence for instruction.⁴⁹ In determining whether particular instructions are misleading, the instructions must be judged as a whole and not by a particular extract.⁵⁰ In stating a distinction between reckless operation of a vehicle and so operating it that the lives and safety of the public might be endangered, the court may properly use illustrations which are to be considered by the jury only as illustrations.⁵¹ However, the court is not obliged, the charge being otherwise complete, to give additional illustrations showing circumstances under which accused is entitled to acquittal.⁵²

Requested instructions. It is proper to refuse requested instructions which are not in proper form,⁵³ or which incorrectly state the law,⁵⁴ or which are inapplicable to the issues in the case,⁵⁵ or applicable only to parts of the evidence,⁵⁶ or which are misleading.⁵⁷ Generally, however, requested instructions which correctly state the law should be given,⁵⁸ but it is not error to refuse a request for a proper instruction when the question of law presented by the requested instruction is covered by other instructions given by the court to the jury.⁵⁹

§ 622. — Verdict and Findings

Conviction of an offense not stated in the charge is not permissible. Generally, it is proper to render a separate verdict on each of several counts of a charge which set forth distinct offenses.

Accused cannot be convicted of an offense not stated in the charge.⁶⁰ Where in a prosecution for reckless driving the indictment contains several counts, each charging distinct offenses under the statute, each count is in fact and theory a separate indictment and it is proper for the jury to give a separate verdict on each count.⁶¹

§ 623. — Judgment, Sentence, and Punishment

The punishment or penalty to be imposed for reckless or dangerous driving depends largely on statutory provisions.

The punishment or penalty to be imposed for reckless or dangerous driving is dependent on the provisions of the statutes or ordinances.⁶² A punishment or penalty imposed which is excessive or unauthorized cannot be enforced.⁶³ However, the fact that a statute provides for the revocation of the operator's license of one guilty of reckless driving does not restrict the penalty which may be imposed to such revocation, where the right to impose other penalties is indicated and may be clearly inferred from a consideration of the statute as a whole.⁶⁴ In the case of a conviction for reckless driving under some municipal ordinances, the court may suspend the driving rights of accused for a limited period in addition to imposing other penalties.⁶⁵

Where a defendant is convicted on several counts in one indictment, each charging a separate offense, the sentence on each count may properly be made to begin at the expiration of a preceding one.⁶⁶ In imposing punishment in a case of clear and uncontroverted guilt, the court may take into consideration, as an extenuating circumstance, the fact that all damages for injuries resulting from the occurrence involved have been paid.⁶⁷

§ 624. — Appeal and Error

In general, in the absence of prejudicial error, a conviction on sufficient evidence will be affirmed.

In general, an appellate court will review a conviction for reckless or dangerous driving which is sustained by evidence, only to ascertain whether defendant had a fair and impartial trial or whether there were prejudicial errors or mistakes requiring a new trial in the interest of justice,⁶⁸ and, in the absence of prejudicial errors, a conviction on sufficient evidence will be affirmed.⁶⁹ Where, however, accused has been charged, tried, and convicted under a statute which had been superseded and repealed by a later statute, the judgment of conviction will be reversed.⁷⁰ A conviction will be set aside on certiorari where the record returned by the trial magistrate does not disclose that he had jurisdiction to try the case.⁷¹

A plea of guilty does not constitute a waiver of the right to raise on appeal the objection that the information is not sufficient to charge a crime.⁷² Similarly, where an information fails to charge an offense, accused, by proceeding with the case, after the denial of his motion to dismiss, does not waive the right to maintain his objection to the sufficiency of the information on appeal.⁷³

§ 625. Driving While under Influence of Intoxicants or Drugs

- a. In general
- b. Nature and grade of offense
- c. Elements of offense

a. In General

Where a statute or ordinance so provides, it is an offense to drive a motor vehicle while intoxicated or while under the influence of intoxicating liquor or narcotic drugs.

Under many statutes and ordinances it is an offense for one to operate or drive a motor vehicle while intoxicated, or under the influence of intoxicating liquor,⁷⁴ or when addicted to, or un-

(4) Other reasons and purposes see 42 C.J. p 1329 note 13 [b].

Reckless driving distinguished

(1) Driving recklessly, driving so as to endanger life, limb, or property, and driving under influence of

der the influence of, narcotic drugs.⁷⁵

The validity of these statutes and ordinances has frequently been sustained⁷⁶ and the power of the state or municipality to prohibit such operation and to make violation of the prohibition an offense has been sustained under the police power.⁷⁷ However, unless authorized so to do by charter or statute,⁷⁸ a municipality has no power to enact an ordinance creating such an offense where the matter is covered by state statute,⁷⁹ nor, unless it is so empowered,⁸⁰ can it prescribe a punishment liquor are not identical offenses.—State v. Andrews, 142 A. 840, 108 Conn. 209.

(2) Reckless driving is a distinct offense, established by different evidence, from the crime of driving an automobile while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.—State v. Sisneros, 82 P.2d 274, 42 N.M. 500.

Amendment of statute

(1) Statute penalizing driving under influence of liquor was held to amend by implication act relating to drunken driving.—Daniels v. State, 296 S.W. 20, 155 Tenn. 549.

(2) Statute defining offense of driving an automobile while intoxicated was held "amended" and not "repealed" by later act defining the offense but prescribing a different punishment, offenses committed prior to the amendment being governed by the earlier statute.—Bedwell v. State, 155 S.W.2d 930, 142 Tex.Cr. 599—Davis v. State, 155 S.W.2d 801, 142 Tex.Cr. 602—Jones v. State, 104 S.W.2d 871, 132 Tex.Cr. 445.

Repeals of Eighteenth Amendment and state prohibition act were held not to require adoption of more liberal view of crime of driving automobile while intoxicated, statute defining such crime not being changed by such repeals.—People v. Fellows, 34 P.2d 177, 139 Cal.App. 337.

Causing injury to another

Statute making it a felony to drive vehicle while under influence of intoxicating liquor so that his act or neglect proximately causes bodily injury to another, even though same act by sober operator would constitute a misdemeanor only, has been held constitutional.—People v. Chatham, 110 P.2d 704, 43 Cal.App.2d 298.

"To any degree"

Phrase "to any degree under influence of intoxicating liquor" in statute was held not to invalidate statute.—Nunn v. State, 26 S.W.2d 618, 114 Tex.Cr. 487—Williams v. State, 271 S.W. 628, 100 Tex.Cr. 50.

Punishment as affecting validity

Statute providing that intoxicated operator of motor vehicle causing physical injuries to another "may" be imprisoned with or without hard labor was held not unconstitutional as not compelling but merely permitting imposition of penalty, statute meaning that offender shall be imprisoned and that imprisonment may be either with or without hard labor, in judge's discretion.—State v. Hill, 177 So. 421, 188 La. 444.

Change in punishment

Statute penalizing driving automobile while intoxicated and amendment thereto providing that on conviction accused should be prohibited from driving automobile for period fixed by jury was held not violative of penal code that no penalty affixed to offense by one law should be cumulative of penalties under former law.—Haworth v. State, 88 S.W.2d 115, 129 Tex.Cr. 428.

Voluntary intoxication

The statute creating offense of operating motor vehicle while intoxicated is constitutional as contemplating only voluntary intoxication resulting from imbibing alcoholic liquors.—People ex rel. Seagrist v. Mederer, 33 N.Y.S.2d 114.

Reason for rule

An automobile is a "dangerous instrumentality" and in the hands of a drunken man is likely to become a "deadly weapon"—People v. Chatham, 110 P.2d 704, 43 Cal.App.2d 298.

After conviction

The legislature, under its police power, may also make it a penal offense to drive a motor vehicle within a prescribed period after a conviction for driving while intoxicated.—State v. Campbell, 107 So. 788, 21 Ala.App. 303.

ND.—City of Fargo v. Glaser, 244 N.W. 905, 62 N.D. 673.

Reason for rule

Driving automobile while under influence of intoxicating liquor is matter of state-wide importance and not mere regulation of motor traffic within jurisdiction of municipality.—City of Fargo v. Glaser, supra.

As affected by punishment

Ordinance providing for imprisonment other than as an alternative to nonpayment of a fine was held invalid as constituting punishment for a crime, a matter beyond the power of a municipality.—City of Racine v. Woitshhek, 29 N.W.2d 752, 251 Wis. 404—State ex rel. Keefe v. Schmiedege, 28 N.W.2d 345, 251 Wis. 79.

therefor different from that prescribed by statute for the same offense;⁸¹ but it has been held that the state may declare such act to be a felony, even though it is committed upon the streets of a municipality, which has charter powers, and which has declared such act to be a misdemeanor.⁸²

While, as discussed infra § 633, a provision in such a regulation that having intoxicating liquor on or about the person of the driver or in his vehicle is prima facie evidence of a violation of the statute creates an arbitrary and unreasonable presumption and is invalid, this invalidity does not affect the validity of the remainder of the statute.⁸³

Permitting operation by intoxicated person. Under some statutes it is an offense for any person to permit another who is under the influence of intoxicating liquor to operate a motor vehicle which is owned by the former or is in his custody or control.⁸⁴

Repeal of statute or ordinance. A statute with respect to the offense of driving in an intoxicated condition is not repealed by the enactment of a subsequent statute on the same subject unless there is an irreconcilable conflict between the two.⁸⁵ Accordingly, such a statute has been held not to be repealed by a subsequent statute authorizing municipalities to regulate automobile operation and parking within their corporate limits⁸⁶ or by a statute authorizing municipalities to prohibit drunken driving on the city streets.⁸⁷ Similarly, a statute prohibiting driving while in an intoxicated condition or under the influence of intoxicating liquor is not repealed by a subsequent statute prohibiting driving while intoxicated on highways outside incorporated municipalities⁸⁸ or by a statute providing punishment for appearing in a public place while intoxicated.⁸⁹ Of course, where an ordinance of the kind under consideration is annulled by statute, a conviction thereunder is invalid,⁹⁰ but the repeal of a statute which is substantially re-enacted at the same time, except for a change in the penalty, has been held not to constitute a repeal in effect, so as to bar prosecution for the offense committed before such repeal.⁹¹

Construction. Although it has been held that a statute denouncing the offense of driving while under the influence of intoxicants is a penal statute and must be strictly construed,⁹² it has also been held that such a statute, since it is designed to protect the public, should be liberally or reasonably construed⁹³ in order to effect its purpose⁹⁴ and to reduce the hazard of prohibited operation of a motor vehicle to a minimum.⁹⁵ Such a regulation is not retroactive, so as to warrant the conviction of a person for driving while intoxicated before the regulation went into effect.⁹⁶

Absence of option between fine and imprisonment

Ordinance providing as a maximum penalty imprisonment for the same period of time as the maximum imprisonment provided by state law for such offense was not invalid as providing for a greater penalty than that of the state law, even though ordinance did not give court option of imposing a jail sentence or a fine as did state law.—State v. Weeks, 12 N.W.2d 493, 216 Minn. 279 not under the general provisions.—Commonwealth v. Pollinger, supra.

Joint prosecution

Where the offenses of operating a motor vehicle under influence of intoxicating liquor and permitting another to operate a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor are committed at one and the same time, and grow out of one and the same transaction, one return, one complaint, one warrant, and one hearing are sufficient to promote the due administration of justice.—*Commonwealth v. Persons liable. Any person who comes within the terms of the statute denouncing the offense is subject to prosecution thereunder.⁹⁷ The fact that a person is an employee of another does not excuse a violation of the statute.⁹⁸ Where aiders or abettors are indictable as principals, one who does not drive, but who aids and abets an intoxicated driver, may be charged with the offense.⁹⁹

Defenses. The fact that the driver of the vehicle with which accused's vehicle collided might also have been guilty does not exonerate accused of the offense of driving while intoxicated.¹

b. Nature and Grade of Offense

The grade of the offense of driving while under the influence of intoxicants depends on the terms of the statute or ordinance denouncing the offense.

The offense of drunken driving has been held to be not only malum prohibitum but also malum in se.² Under some statutes the driving of a motor vehicle while intoxicated is in the nature of a minor³ or petty⁴ offense, such as disorderly conduct,⁵ and in some jurisdictions this is true because it is created by municipal ordinance and is in the nature of a police regulation.⁶ In some jurisdictions, however, the offense constitutes a felony, either because of an express declaration in the statute to this effect⁷ or because of the nature of the penalty authorized.⁸ Thus, where the statute permits a punishment of one year's imprisonment, which must under the general penal law be in the state prison, the offense is a statutory felony⁹ and as such constitutes an infamous crime.¹⁰ The offense is also a felony where the statute provides for imprisonment in a penitentiary, although it carries the alternative of imprisonment in a county jail.¹¹ Under some statutes the offense of driving while intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquor is a misdemeanor,¹² or the offense may be a misdemeanor or a felony, depending on the circumstances of the particular case.¹³ Accordingly, where the statute so provides, it is a felony to inflict property damage or bodily injury on another while driving in an intoxicated condition¹⁴ if the bodily injury is proximately caused

"Employees"

Statute providing that a "person who, being employed upon a railway," or being a driver on any public highway, shall be intoxicated "while in the discharge of any such duties" shall be guilty of a gross misdemeanor applies to any person driving on a public highway while intoxicated, even though he is not driving as an employee, notwithstanding headnote to the section reading "Intoxication of Employees," since the word "employed" is used in the sense of being engaged in the enterprise referred to and not in the sense of employment by another for wages.—State v. Addiction to drugs. Under some statutes driving on a highway while addicted to, or under the influence of, narcotic drugs constitutes a felony.¹⁶

c. Elements of Offense

- (1) In general
- (2) Intoxication or under influence of intoxicating liquor

(1) In General

The elements of the offense of driving while under the influence of intoxicants are determined from the statute creating it.

The elements of the offense of driving while under the influence of intoxicants are determined by the terms of the statutes or ordinances which create it.¹⁷ A statute which is complete and sufficient in itself to define the offense has been held not to be dependent on, or governed by, definitions contained in general provisions of the motor vehicle law.¹⁸ All elements of the offense must be present in order to justify conviction.¹⁹

The essential elements of the offense, under statutes prohibiting the operation of a motor vehicle upon any public street or highway while intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquors, are driving or operating an automobile, discussed infra § 628, upon a public street or highway, infra § 629,

while intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquors, infra subdivision c (2) of this section. Where all the elements of the offense are present, it is punishable without regard to whether the driving or operation is negligently or recklessly done²⁰ and without regard to whether anyone has been injured thereby.²¹ Under some statutes, however, it is necessary to constitute the offense, not only that the motor vehicle was operated by the person charged while he was in an intoxicated condition, but also that such operation resulted in injury to person or property,²² proximately caused by some act forbidden by law or neglect of duty imposed by law.²³

Intent has been held to be no factor in a prosecution for operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor,²⁴ nor is ownership of the vehicle involved an element of the offense.²⁵

(2) Intoxication or under Influence of Intoxicating Liquor

The accused must be intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquor to be guilty of the offense of driving while intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

In order to justify conviction for the offenses of driving while intoxicated or while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, it is essential to establish that accused was intoxicated or under the

Defective windshield

In driving automobile with windshield in defective condition because of dust and rain spots, accused committed an act forbidden by law and neglected duty imposed by law within statute covering offense of causing bodily injury to another as proximate result of neglecting duty imposed by law or doing acts forbidden by law while driving while intoxicated.—People v. Graybehl, 153 P.2d 771, 67 Cal.App.2d 210.

Reckless driving

Driving, while intoxicated, in a manner indicating a willful disregard for safety of persons or property justified conviction for injuring third person while operating automobile under influence of liquor.—People v. Dawes, 98 P.2d 787, 37 Cal. App 2d 44.

Unlawful speed

In order for speed to constitute an unlawful act within the statute, the criterion must be the reasonableness of the speed in relation to the physical facts surrounding the highway and its use at the particular time. Under this test one driving at an estimated speed of fifty-five miles per hour momentarily driving onto the left portion of a highway and then back again to the right side and ultimately over an embankment, killing a guest passenger, was held not to have violated the statute.—Ex parte Ryan, 142 P.2d 769, 61 Cal.App. 2d 310.

influence of intoxicating liquor,²⁶ although the degree of intoxication is immaterial.²⁷

The phrase "under the influence of liquor" as used in the statutes under consideration is a very elastic term²⁸ and has been construed as being substantially synonymous with such words as "intoxicated," "intoxication," or "drunkenness,"²⁹ and with the terms "in an intoxicated condition"³⁰ and "in a drunken or partly drunken condition,"³¹ but as not synonymous with "while intoxicated."³² However, the driver of a motor vehicle need not be in a state of drunkenness to be "under the influence of intoxicating liquor," within the meaning of such term as used in a statute.³³ On the other hand, where the statute makes it unlawful to drive an automobile upon a public street if the driver is either in an intoxicated condition or under the influence of intoxicating liquor, it has been held that the two phrases as used in such a statute are not synonymous in meaning,³⁴ although there is an offense within the contemplation of the statute whether the driver is drunk, and so is in an intoxicated condition, or is merely under the influence of intoxicating liquor and not actually drunk or intoxicated.³⁵

One is intoxicated, within a statute prohibiting driving while intoxicated, when he does not have the normal use of his physical and mental faculties by reason of the use of intoxicating liquor,³⁶ or when, by reason of such use, he is incapable of driving with the care essential to the safety of occupants of the vehicle and others.³⁷

Although it is not any and every "influence" produced by intoxicants that will subject one to a penalty under a statute prohibiting the operation of a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor,³⁸ the expression "under the influence of intoxicating liquor" covers not only all the well-known and easily recognized conditions and degrees of intoxication, but any abnormal mental or physical condition which is the result of indulging to any degree in intoxicating liquors, and which tends to deprive a driver of that clearness of intellect and control of himself which he would otherwise possess.³⁹ Accordingly, if intoxicating liquor has so far affected the nervous system, brain, or muscles of a driver of an automobile as to impair, to an appreciable degree,⁴⁰ his ability to operate his car in the manner in which an ordinarily prudent and cautious man, in the full possession of his faculties and using reasonable care, would operate or drive a similar vehicle under like conditions, such driver is "under the influence of intoxicating liquor" within the meaning of the statute.⁴¹ However, it is not essential, in order to be under the influence of intoxicating liquor, that the driver of the automobile should be so intoxicated that he cannot safely drive a car,⁴² or that he do or fail to do an act or thing which he would not have done but for the drinking of the intoxicants,⁴³ for one who drives an automobile upon a public street while under the influence of intoxicating liquor offends against a statute prohibiting such operation, even though he drives so slowly and so skillfully and carefully that the public is not annoyed or endangered,⁴⁴ and it is immaterial whether he exercised due care to avoid injury to other travelers,⁴⁵ as he may be convicted of the offense even though there were no travelers on the street.⁴⁶

"In an intoxicated condition." Under a statute penalizing the operation of a motor vehicle while in an intoxicated condition it is essential to establish that the driver was in such condition while he was operating the vehicle.⁴⁷ Although it is not essential, under such a statute, that the driver be in a state of drunkenness,⁴⁸ neither, on the other hand, is it sufficient to constitute an intoxicated condition within the meaning of the statute that the mind of the driver is slightly stimulated or exhilarated as a result of his drinking of intoxicants,⁴⁹ but the test of intoxication as contemplated by such statute depends on the impairment to some extent, however slight it may be, of the judgment or mental or physical faculties of a driver to operate an automobile as a result of drinking an alcoholic beverage.⁵⁰ Accordingly, a person is intoxicated for the purposes of this statute when he has imbibed enough liquor to render him incapable of giving that attention and care to the operation of his automobile that a man of prudence and reasonable intelligence would give.⁵¹ Voluntary intoxication is contemplated by the statute,⁵² not intoxication resulting from an overdose of drugs prescribed by a physician.⁵³

Cause of intoxication. A statute prohibiting operation while under the influence of intoxicating liquor or a narcotic drug or a habit-producing drug has been held to state but a single offense of driving while intoxicated, whether the intoxication be caused by drinking intoxicating liquors or by a narcotic or habit-producing drug.⁵⁴ Similarly, the gravamen of the offense of driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor or of any drug has been held to be driving under the influence of either of the substances named.⁵⁵ The term "intoxicated," as used in a provision against driving while in an intoxicated condition, has been held to include intoxication produced by excessive use of agencies other than alcoholic liquors voluntarily taken.⁵⁶

Intoxicating liquor within the intent of these statutes has been held to be any liquor which in fact is capable of subjecting a person to its alcoholic influence, and so does, regardless of the percent of its alcoholic content;⁵⁷ definitions of what constitutes intoxicating liquor in a statute requiring a liquor license or in a tax statute are held inapplicable in the enforcement of statutes prohibiting operation of a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.⁵⁸

§ 626. — Distinguished from Public Nuisance

The statutory offense of driving a motor vehicle on a public street while under the influence of intoxicating liquor differs from a common-law or public nuisance.

The driving of a motor vehicle on a public street while under the influence of intoxicating liquor is not a public or common nuisance indictable at common law.⁵⁹ It differs from a public nuisance in that the statutory offense of driving while intoxicated is complete when the act prohibited has been done, whether with or without inconvenience or annoyance to the public, while a nuisance is not committed unless and until there is an inconvenience or annoyance to the public.⁶⁰ Accordingly, a statute which declares that any person who shall operate an automobile over any public street or highway while under the influence of intoxicating liquor shall be punished as a disorderly person does not describe a public nuisance.⁶¹

There is no inconsistency or duplication between a charter provision penalizing intoxication which violates public decency, without referring to motor vehicles, and state statutes governing drunken driving—*People v. § 627. — Distinguished from Intoxication

The statutory offenses of intoxication and of driving an automobile while intoxicated are separate offenses.

The statutory offenses of intoxication and of driving an automobile while intoxicated are separate and distinct crimes.⁶² In order to sustain a conviction for the former it is only necessary to show that accused was intoxicated, it being wholly immaterial what he was doing, whether operating a motor vehicle or doing something else,⁶³ while in the offense under consideration it is necessary not only to show that accused was intoxicated, but that he was operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated.⁶⁴

§ 628. — Operation or Driving

Under most of the statutes driving or operating a motor vehicle is an essential element of the offense of driving while under the influence of intoxicants.

Driving or operating a motor vehicle is an essential element of the offense of driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated.⁶⁵ One is not guilty of the offense merely because he was intoxicated and rode in a motor vehicle;⁶⁶ it must appear that

Riding with unlicensed driver

(1) Under a statute permitting the operation of motor vehicles by unlicensed persons if riding with, or accompanied by, a licensed operator, but also providing that such licensed operator shall be liable for violations of the law committed by such unlicensed operator, in order to avoid the statutory penalty a licensed operator riding with a person who was intoxicated did not have the burden of ascertaining whether such person's purported license was in effect.—Commonwealth v. Sabean, 176 N.E. 523, 275 Mass. 546.

(2) Accused was not guilty of operating truck while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, because of his presence as a licensed operator in the truck being driven by an unlicensed driver, even though under statute accused would be liable for a violation of law by the companion if accused knowingly consented to operation of truck by companion, under the protection of accused's license.—Commonwealth v. Jordan, 37 accused actually drove such vehicle⁶⁷ simultaneously with being in the prohibited condition.⁶⁸

While it has been held that an automobile is not being operated or driven where it remains stationary during the entire time and no attempt is made to move it,⁶⁹ operation is not required to be complete or extended to come within the prohibition of the statute,⁷⁰ nor need the automobile be actually in motion to constitute operation,⁷¹ since it is sufficient operation if accused set in motion the operative machinery of the vehicle⁷² for the purpose of putting the vehicle in motion.⁷³ Thus the fact that the automobile was not put in motion because the motor was not powerful enough to force it over a curb without stalling is no defense.⁷⁴ It is not even necessary that the engine be running in order to constitute the operation of a vehicle within the meaning of such a statute.⁷⁵

Actual physical control of automobile. A statute making it an offense for one under the influence of intoxicating liquor to operate or be in actual physical control of any motor vehicle has been held to create two separate offenses, one for operating the vehicle and another for being in actual physical control of the vehicle.⁷⁶ Actual physical control within such a statute has been held to have a broader meaning than an ability to stop the vehicle.⁷⁷

§ 629. — Place of Operation

Where the statute so provides, operation of a vehicle on a public street or highway is an essential element of the offense, but operation of a vehicle in a private place is sufficient to constitute the offense where the statute penalizes the operation of a motor vehicle while intoxicated.

Under statutes, which are part of the general law regulating the use of the roads,⁷⁸ and which penalize the driving of a motor vehicle while intoxicated on a public street or highway, the commission of the prohibited act on the public street or highway is an essential element of the offense.⁷⁹

"Operator"

The statutory definition of "operator," for the purpose of the statute relating to operators' and chauffeurs' automobile licenses is not applicable to criminal statute making it an offense to operate an automobile while intoxicated.—State v. Thomason, 276 N.W. 619, 224 Iowa 499.

Operation

The word "operates" was held to refer to the actual physical handling of the controls of the vehicle and it is not satisfied by merely consenting, while under influence of intoxicating liquor, to stand as sponsor, under statute, for another, who is not licensed, and who does the actual operating, even if the licensee knowingly consents to stand in that relation.—Commonwealth v. Jordan, 37 N.E.2d 123, 310 Mass. 85, 137 A.L.R. 474.

Backing to disengage vehicle

An intoxicated person's conduct, after collision, in backing automobile four or five feet in order to disengage it from other automobile and to park it, was not "driving on the highway" within terms of statute.—People v. Kelley, 70 P.2d 276, 27 Cal. App.2d Supp. 771.

Every public road or thoroughfare is a public highway within the meaning of such a statute,⁸⁰ whether in an incorporated or unincorporated town or village,⁸¹ and may be shown to be such by proof that it is used as such by the public.⁸² Hence driving in a public park while intoxicated constitutes an offense thereunder,⁸³ as does driving on a roadway within fair grounds.⁸⁴ A public road within the statute is not limited to an official road or one established by prescriptive use.⁸⁵ On the other hand, a statute which provides that no person shall operate a motor vehicle while in the prohibited condition does not require, as an element of the offense, that the driving should be done on a public highway.⁸⁶ Under such a statute commission of the offense in a private place has been held to be within its terms.⁸⁷

Where the offense under the statute consists in driving an automobile within the limits of any incorporated city, town, or village while intoxicated, the driving in such a condition in an incorporated municipality is an integral part of the offense.⁸⁸

§ 630. — Attempts to Commit Offense

In order to convict one of an attempt to commit the offense of operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, it is necessary that an overt act have been done with an intent to operate the vehicle in violation of the statute.

Under permissive statutes, one charged with, and tried for, operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor may properly be convicted of an attempt to commit the offense.⁸⁹

Reason for rule

Statute which merely provides that no person shall operate a motor vehicle while in an intoxicated condition, or when under the influence of drugs, is not a road regulation but a prohibition against an intoxicated person operating an automobile—State v. Pike, 278 S.W. 725, 312 Mo. 27.

Legislative intent

Statute was held to manifest legislative intent that the operation of the statute was not to be confined to public places in view of history of legislation and the omission of the words "public street or highway" contained in the antecedent act, where it was apparent that the legislature designedly omitted the quoted words in order to enlarge the scope of the statute—State v. O'Grady, 21 A.2d 864, 19 N.J.Misc. 559.

"Any other place"

Amendment to the traffic law, which restated the prohibition against operating a motor vehicle on any way, bridge, public park, or public parkway while under the influence of intoxicating liquor or drugs and added a prohibition of op-

Place where vehicles are normally driven

A statute making it an offense to operate a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor regardless of whether or not the operation is on a public highway, but expressing in the title to the act as its subject "the protection of public safety," must be construed to limit the offense to driving in a place where other vehicles are normally driven.—Commonwealth v. and a separate indictment charging an attempt to commit the offense is not necessary.⁹⁰ In accordance with the general rules pertaining to criminal attempts, however, as discussed in Criminal Law § 75, there can be no conviction of an attempt unless the overt acts were done with the intent to operate the motor vehicle in violation of the statute,⁹¹ and hence an indictment which charges such offense must sufficiently allege that the overt acts were done with the intent to commit the principal offense.⁹²

The jurisdiction of particular courts over prosecutions for driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated is governed by the statute creating the offense, or, in the absence of provision therein, by the general statutes conferring jurisdiction over criminal offenses.

The jurisdiction of particular courts over prosecutions for driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated is governed by the statute creating the offense, or, in the absence of provision therein, by the general statutes conferring jurisdiction over criminal offenses,⁹³ it sometimes being vested in justices of the peace or similar magistrates.⁹⁴ However, where, under constitutional provisions, the nature of the offense is such as requires prosecutions therefor to be by indictment, as discussed in Indictments and Informations § 9, municipal and police courts and trial justices have no jurisdiction thereof,⁹⁵ and a statute is invalid which attempts to give them even concurrent jurisdiction with the supreme and superior courts.⁹⁶ If the jurisdiction of the inferior court is limited to offenses of a specified nature which do not include offenses of the class into which driving while intoxicated falls, such a court does not have jurisdiction of the offense.⁹⁷ Thus if the offense as charged is in the nature of a felony, an inferior court whose jurisdiction is limited to the trial of misdemeanors is without jurisdiction to try the case.⁹⁸

The jurisdiction of an inferior court, conferred by statute, to try one for the offense and assess the penalty has been held unaffected by further provisions authorizing the court to recommend suspension of defendant's license on conviction and requiring the court to report the conviction to the motor vehicle authorities, notwithstanding the limitations imposed on the inferior courts with respect to the punishment and penalties which they may assess.⁹⁹

"Nearest" justice

(1) Under statute requiring one arrested for the offense without a warrant to be brought before nearest justice for trial, justice of peace was held, on timely objection, not to have jurisdiction of prosecution of motorist for operating motor vehicle while under influence of intoxicating liquor, where motorist was arrested without warrant, and justice's office was further from point of arrest than another justice's office.—State v. Johnson, Del Gen.Sess., 46 A.2d 641.

(2) However, failure of accused to object on this account in due season was held to constitute a waiver thereof, the right to be tried by the nearest justice being intended for the sole benefit of accused.—State v. Guessford, 192 A. 612, 8 W.V.Harr. Del., 357.

Reason for rule

Suspension of a license is not part

Mode of acquiring jurisdiction. Jurisdiction of the court to try and punish an offender for driving an automobile while intoxicated must be acquired in the mode prescribed by law.¹ Under some statutes such jurisdiction is invoked by a verified complaint and warrant which appear regular in all respects;² the court is without jurisdiction of the subject matter if there is no duly verified complaint on which a warrant can issue,³ notwithstanding the appearance of accused in court.⁴ Defects in form in the complaint, however, do not affect the jurisdiction of the court.⁵

It has been held that jurisdiction is not divested because of the manner in which the arrest of accused was made,⁶ as, for example, where it was illegal where the offense was not committed in the presence of the officer making the arrest.⁷

Transfer of cause. Where a prosecution for driving while intoxicated is instituted in a court which, because of the punishment permitted by the statute, is not within the court's jurisdiction, the cause may properly be transferred for trial to the court having jurisdiction of the offense.⁸

Operation as driving

An indictment charging defendant with "operating" a motor vehicle was not deficient in light of statute prohibiting the "driving" of a vehicle, since the words "operate a motor vehicle" include the driving of such vehicle—Ferguson v. State, 23 So. 2d 687, 197 Miss. 825.

forth with such particularity and certainty as will enable accused to prepare his defense.¹² Accordingly, the charge must allege that accused was intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquor,¹³ and where the prosecution is under a statute penalizing the operation of a motor vehicle while intoxicated, so as to cause injury to person or property, the indictment must allege not only that the motor vehicle was operated by the one charged while he was in an intoxicated condition, but also that such operation resulted in injury to person or property.¹⁴ An allegation that the vehicle involved was a motor vehicle without otherwise describing it has been held sufficient.¹⁵

Allegation of place. A charge, under a statute prohibiting the operation of a motor vehicle while intoxicated, need not allege where or at what place the unlawful driving occurred,¹⁶ or that it occurred upon a public highway,¹⁷ it being sufficient if it alleges the acts as done within the county.¹⁸ However, where the statute makes the driving upon a public highway or street an element of the offense, the acts must be charged as done upon a public way or street,¹⁹ in a particular county, where necessary to lay the venue,²⁰ although neither the particular road or street²¹ nor the incorporation of Use of word "unlawfully"

Complaint held sufficient

N.J.—State v. Gavin, 54 A.2d 236, 136 N.J.Law 47.

Second conviction

(1) Indictment charging accused with being a second offender was not required to set out prior conviction with same particularity as it was set out in original complaint or information, it being sufficient to charge that defendant had been convicted of an offense of like character prior to conviction of primary offense charged—Broughton v. State, 188 S.W.2d 393, 148 Tex. Cr. 445.

(2) Statute authorizing more severe punishment for second conviction and not requiring previous violation to be charged in second complaint was not unconstitutional on ground that it deprived accused of right to be informed of accusations against him, since such prosecution was not criminal prosecution and complaint under statute stated nature and cause of accusation with sufficient clarity.—State v. Rowe, 181 A. 706, 116 N.J.Law 48, affirmed 5 A.2d 697, 122 N.J.Law 466.

Misspelling word

Indictment for driving automobile on "Noth 8th Street" in designated city was sufficient to apprise accused that she was charged with driving automobile on "North 8th Street" in such city, and hence indictment was not demurrable—Smith v. State, 92 S.W.2d 1046, 130 Tex. Cr. 117.

Information charging driving while "under the influence of intoxicants" sufficiently charged offense of driving under statute using words while "under the influence of intoxicating liquor."—Sudderth v. State, 282 P. 1109, 45 Okl. Cr. 260.

Degree of intoxication

(1) Indictment charging that accused operated automobile while accused was "in a degree under the influence of intoxicating liquor" was too vague, indefinite, and uncertain to charge an offense—Herwig v. State, 138 S.W.2d 549, 138 Tex. Cr. 645.

Operation causing injury to another

Under a statute making it a felony for one, while intoxicated, to drive a motor vehicle in an unlawful or negligent manner causing injury to another, the information need not charge that the vehicle was driven on a public highway.—People v. Stanley, 57 P.2d 146, 13 Cal.App.2d 559

Operation on highway prohibited

Under a statute prohibiting operation of the vehicle on a highway within the state, an information was not insufficient for failing to allege operation on a public highway.

the municipality²² need be alleged thereunder. Where a statute makes it an offense for any person to drive an automobile upon any street of an incorporated town while intoxicated, no offense is charged unless the act is alleged to have been done in an incorporated town.²³

Where the statute prohibits operation of the vehicle on any way or in any other place, it has been held that the place where the offense was committed must be described with such definiteness and particularity as to enable accused to plead the case in bar on a subsequent prosecution for the same offense,²⁴ but the fact that the place is a public way or public place need not be alleged.²⁵

Language of statute. In conformity with the general rules, discussed in Indictments and Informations § 139, a charge substantially in the language of a statute which creates the offense and states what acts shall constitute a violation thereof is sufficient²⁶ unless the language of the statute is so general as to include cases falling within its literal terms but not within its meaning or spirit.²⁷ Where the statute makes it an offense to drive or operate a motor vehicle while intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquor, drugs, or narcotics, an indictment following the language of the statute, but charging the offense in the dis-

junctive, has been held bad on demurrer, as setting forth several offenses.²⁸ Charging one with being under the influence of intoxicating liquor has been held to be equivalent to charging him with being intoxicated,²⁹ and, conversely, that charging one with being drunk is the equivalent of charging him with being under the influence of intoxicating liquor.³⁰

Recital of statute. It has been held that the statute alleged to be violated need not be specifically mentioned in the complaint.³¹ While accused must not be misled as to the true offense charged by an erroneous reference to the statute,³² a misrecital of the statute which is not misleading does not vitiate the complaint.³³ A complaint which sets forth the original statute alleged to be violated is sufficient, although it does not charge a violation of the statute as amended where such supplementary enactment does not make any substantial change in the nature of the offense.³⁴

Formal requisites. Where so required by statute, the complaint in a prosecution for operating or driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquor must be verified or sworn to before an officer authorized to administer oaths,³⁵ and it has been held that the

35. Who may verify

Under some statutes the complaint may and must be duly verified by person who has knowledge of alleged offense, or by one of the designated existence of such fact should be reflected in the jurat.³⁶

Surplusage. Surplusage in the complaint or information does not affect its sufficiency since it may be disregarded.³⁷

Amendments. Under some statutes the court may permit amendments to the charge if they do not charge a new offense or prejudice accused.³⁸

Bill of particulars. If accused believes the charge to be vague or indefinite, it has been held that he may ask for a bill of particulars.³⁹

Waiver of objections. In the absence of a motion to quash or other proper objection, defendant, by pleading guilty, waives defects in a charge which otherwise sufficiently sets forth the offense;⁴⁰ and, by going to trial without pleading surprise or asking for a postponement, accused has been held to be in no position to complain of a failure of the charge to refer to a prior conviction for the same offense, in a prosecution in which he was convicted as a second offender.⁴¹

b. Issues, Proof, and Variance

All of the essential allegations of the charge must be proved as alleged.

In accordance with general rules discussed in Indictments and Informations §§ 244, 254, in order to sustain a conviction for driving while under the influence of intoxicants, all the essential allegations of the charge must be proved⁴² as alleged.⁴³ Where the charge is driving while under the influence of intoxicants, it is unnecessary to prove that accused was drunk or intoxicated, and proof that

Degree of intoxication

Indictment charging defendant with driving while intoxicated and "while in a degree under the influence of intoxicating liquor" was sufficient to charge defendant with having driven while intoxicated, although allegation charging him with having driven while in a degree under the influence of intoxicating liquor might be rejected as surplusage for alleged vagueness—Walker v. State, 116 S.W.2d 1076, 134 Tex. Cr. 500—Morgan v. State, 116 S.W.2d 1079, 134 Tex. Cr. 490.

Election

Where record as a whole clearly indicated election to charge defendant with specific offense of driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated, allegation in the same count that the defendant had a half pint of liquor in his motor vehicle with seal on bottle broken contrary to statute might be rejected as surplusage where no motion to quash was made and defendant pleaded guilty.—People v. Poe, 26 N.E.2d 415, 304 Ill. App. 601.

41. N.J.—State v. Rowe, 181 A. 706, 116 N.J. Law 48, affirmed 5 A.2d 697, 122 N.J. Law 466.

Particular street or highway

(1) Evidence that accused was seen driving on certain highway on date alleged in indictment was not error, notwithstanding the indictment did not allege name or number of the highway—Mercer v. State, supra.

(2) Under indictment alleging operation of automobile while intoxicated on two streets, evidence need not show offense occurred on both streets.—Noble v. State, 18 S.W.2d 619, 112 Tex. Cr. 676.

Street as public highway

Proof that automobile was driven on public street in named city in such county was held not a variance from an allegation that automobile was driven on a public highway in the county.—White v. State, 95 S.W.2d 429, 131 Tex. Cr. 69—Blackman v. State, Tex. Cr., 20 S.W.2d 783.

he was under the influence of intoxicants is sufficient;⁴⁴ under such an allegation, however, it may be proved that accused was drunk.⁴⁵ If the charge contains unnecessary descriptive averments as to the place where the offense was committed the state must prove them as alleged.⁴⁶ So, where the offense is alleged to have been committed on a public highway, the state must prove such fact although such allegation was unnecessary under the statute.⁴⁷ Similarly, where the information contains an unnecessary description of the vehicle it must be proved as described.⁴⁸

§ 633. — Evidence

- a. In general
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. In General

The burden of proving every element of the offense of driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated is on the prosecution.

A statute providing that the having of intoxicating liquor on or about his person or in his vehicle by the driver of a motor vehicle is prima facie evidence of a violation of the statute has been held to create an arbitrary and unreasonable presumption.⁴⁹

In accordance with the rules relating to the burden of proof in criminal prosecutions generally, the burden of proving every element of the offense of driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated is on the prosecution.⁵⁰ However, it is not necessary to prove any specific degree of intoxication as this is a question of fact to be determined from all the circumstances of the case.⁵¹ So, in a prosecution for driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, the state need not prove that accused was drunk,⁵² or that the intoxication had reached a stage where it would interfere with the operation of the vehicle,⁵³ nor is the state required to prove that accused had taken any particular intoxicating beverage.⁵⁴

Accused is not required to take the stand or produce other witnesses but may stand on the rec-

Name or number of highway

(1) If the state in an indictment charging the driving of a motor vehicle on a public highway by a motorist while intoxicated alleges the name or number of the highway or street the state must prove the name or number as alleged, although the indictment would not have been defective had it failed to allege the name or number of the highway—Thomas v. State, Tex.Cr., 210 S.W.2d 826—Stasney v. State, Tex.Cr., 208 S.W.2d 894—Hadley v. State, Tex.Cr., 205 S.W.2d 374—Mercer v. State, 157 S.W.2d 919, 143 Tex.Cr. 196—Bedwell v. Voluntary intoxication

Prosecution has burden of proving that defendant's intoxication was caused by voluntary use of intoxicating liquor.—Commonwealth v. Dale, 163 N.E. 158, 264 Mass. 535.

Place of offense

Burden was on state to prove that automobile was driven upon highway described in indictment—Stasney v. State, Tex.Cr., 208 S.W.2d 894—Blackburn v. State, Tex.Cr., 204 S.W.2d 619—Walker v. State, 125 S.W.2d 571, 136 Tex.Cr. 368.

ord and demand an acquittal if he believes the state has failed to make out a case against him by the evidence.⁵⁵ If he takes the stand, however, and introduces other witnesses, he thereby authorizes the court to determine the sufficiency of the proof from the whole case.⁵⁶

b. Admissibility

Competent evidence which tends to prove or disprove the elements of the offense charged is admissible in prosecutions for driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicants.

In conformity with the general rules governing the admissibility of evidence in criminal cases, any competent evidence is admissible on the part of the prosecution which tends to prove any element of the offense charged.⁵⁷ Thus, on the issue of intoxication, it is proper to show the facts and circumstances connected with the offense,⁵⁸ such as the appearance and conduct of accused at the time he was driving the automobile,⁵⁹ the manner and result of his driving,⁶⁰ and the use or possession of intoxicating liquor by accused or by others with him in the car.⁶¹ However, evidence on the issue of intoxication must not be too re-

Aider and abettor

In prosecution for violating statute by aiding and abetting third person to commit the offense, evidence that third person was an agent for partnership of which accused was a member, and was using accused's automobile under direction of manager of the business and not under direction of accused who went along with third person at his invitation merely for the ride, was admissible.—State v. Storms, 10 N.W.2d 53, 233 Iowa 655

Public nature of road

(1) Street, road, or highway may be shown to be "public," that is, used or open for use and traffic by public, by oral testimony of persons reasonably familiar with such use in trial for driving automobile thereon while intoxicated.—Nichols v. State, 49 S.W.2d 783, 120 Tex.Cr. 219.

(2) Showing of absence of court order establishing road on which accused was driving while intoxicated rendered admissible evidence showing public usage.—Johnson v. State, 31 S.W.2d 1084, 116 Tex.Cr. 185.

(3) Time or manner of dedication, title to soil, and location of public highway, private rights, and privileges are ordinarily immaterial in trial for driving automobile while intoxicated on highway shown by uncontradicted testimony to be open or used for traffic by public generally.—Nichols v. State, supra.

Conduct on another street

Where accused is charged with operating the vehicle on a named street, evidence as to accused's conduct on another street is admissible as a part of the same transaction and continuous series of events leading up to his operation of the automobile on the named street.—Sale v. State, 186 S.E. 198, 53 Ga.App. 489.

Medical evidence

Act providing that accused, charged with operating automobile while intoxicated, may be examined by own physician, and should be so informed, did not by implication make inadmissible state's medical evidence for not informing.—State v. Cantara, 148 A. 415, 50 R.I. 440.

Alcoholic breath

(1) Evidence that accused's breath smelled of whisky is admissible.—State v. Fitzpatrick, Mo.App., 267 S.W. 905.

(2) Fact that accused's breath smelled of alcohol, although the type of liquor could not be identified, was held admissible.—Johnson v. State, 147 S.W.2d 811, 141 Tex.Cr. 175.

Evidence held admissible

(1) Fact that bottle of liquor was found near place of accident.

Cal.—People v. Skoff, 21 P.2d 118, 131 Cal.App. 235.

Iowa.—State v. Jenkins, 212 N.W. 475, 203 Iowa 251.

(2) Alcoholic content of wine as shown by laboratory report.—Halloway v. State, 175 S.W.2d 258, 146 Tex.Cr. 353.

(3) Specimen of accused's blood, properly identified and voluntarily given soon after his arrest.—State v. Werling, 13 N.W.2d 318, 234 Iowa 1109.

(4) Other evidence see 42 C.J. p 1334 note 48 [a].

mote in point of time or too speculative.⁶² Where the prosecution is for injury to property while operating an automobile in an intoxicated condition, a statement as to who the occupants of the injured car were, and whether they were injured, is admissible notwithstanding accused is not charged with injury to person,⁶³ since the injury of such people was so intimately connected with defendant's criminal act as to form part of it.⁶⁴

On the part of accused, any competent evidence is admissible which tends to prove his matters of defense or disprove any element of the offense.⁶⁵ Thus, where intoxication is claimed to have been the cause of certain conduct of accused, it is competent to show like occurrences on other occasions which indicate that the cause for such conduct was other than intoxication, as, for example, insanity or habitual eccentricity.⁶⁶ Evidence of accused so remote in point of time as to confuse rather than illuminate should not be admitted.⁶⁷

Intoxication before collision

In prosecution for driving while intoxicated and inflicting bodily injury in collision, evidence that deceased was intoxicated several hours before collision was properly excluded as too remote in time and in view of accused's failure to offer to show causal connection between such intoxication and collision—People v. Trantham, 74 P.2d 851, 24 Cal.App.2d 177.

Subsequent intoxication

(1) Evidence showing that accused was seen intoxicated the following day is inadmissible where it is not established that accused was continuously intoxicated from time of the driving until the following afternoon.—State v. Kelly, 40 S.E.2d 454, 227 N.C. 62.

(2) Evidence that some time after accident accused, charged with operating motor vehicle while intoxicated, appeared to be drunk, was held inadmissible, in absence of proof of nonaccess to liquor after collision—Phillips v. State, 145 So. 169, 25 Ala. App. 286.

(3) Evidence of subsequent intoxication was held admissible, however, where there was proof that accused consumed no liquor after the accident.—State v. Rickel, 286 N.W. 895, 69 N.D. 329.

(4) Evidence of subsequent intoxication has also been held admissible, the remoteness in time going to the weight rather than the admissibility of the evidence—King v. State, 113 S.W.2d 181, 133 Tex.Cr. 496—Jones v. State, 92 S.W.2d 246, 130 Tex.Cr. 102.

Method of driving

In prosecution for driving an automobile while intoxicated and by accused's negligence and reckless conduct causing the death of another, testimony as to accused's method of driving automobile shortly before accident was admissible as evidence of negligence, recklessness and want of care at time of accident.—Latton v. People, 168 P.2d 266, 114 Colo. 534.

Careful driving

Evidence that defendant's automobile was being driven in cautious, prudent, and orderly manner before it was stopped was held admissible—People v. Fellows, 34 P.2d 177, 139 Cal.App. 337.

Evidence of collateral matters held not admissible.—State v. Bosseau, 13 P.2d 53, 168 Wash. 669.

Cost of repair

Proof that defendant had actually paid prosecuting witness more than it cost the witness to fix up his automobile after a collision with defendant's automobile was properly re-

Evidence as to gravity of offense. Under a statute permitting a wide range in punishment and authorizing the jury to make the punishment fit the crime, it is proper to show all the facts and circumstances connected with the crime charged in order that the jury may consider such matters in assessing the appropriate punishment.⁶⁸ For this purpose it is proper and admissible in evidence to show that, as a result of accused's driving while intoxicated, a passenger in his car was killed.⁶⁹

c. Weight and Sufficiency

As in other criminal prosecutions, the guilt of the accused must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

In accordance with the rules pertaining to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to support a conviction in criminal cases generally, the guilt of one accused of the offense of driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated must be established beyond a reasonable doubt,⁷⁰ and evidence giving fused—State v. Rickel, 286 N.W. 895, 69 N.D. 329.

Negligence of another

Negligence of driver of other automobile involved in collision was held immaterial on question whether accused drove automobile while intoxicated—Holley v. State, 144 So. 535, 25 Ala.App. 260, certiorari denied 144 So. 537, 225 Ala. 597.

Nonintoxicating character of liquor used by accused may be proved to show that he was not intoxicated—Drew v. State, 112 P.2d 429, 71 Okl.Cr. 415.

Cross examination

Refusal to permit accused in trial for driving automobile while intoxicated to ask deputy sheriff, who arrested her, if it was not his custom to testify that accused was drunk, held not error.—Nichols v. State, 49 S.W.2d 783, 120 Tex.Cr. 219.

rise to a mere inference, conjecture, or suspicion of guilt is not sufficient to warrant a conviction.⁷¹ A conviction may rest on circumstantial evidence⁷² but the question whether the evidence is sufficient to support the conviction depends on the facts of the particular case.⁷³

Intoxication need not be proved by one who actually accompanied the driver,⁷⁴ nor, in order to establish intoxication, is it necessary to prove the process by which accused became intoxicated.⁷⁵ The mere fact that accused operated his automobile recklessly along a highway is not evidence of intoxication;⁷⁶ nor is intoxication established by the mere fact that accused drank intoxicating liquor or had an odor of liquor on his breath, in the absence of some proof showing that it produced in him some manifestation of intoxication.⁷⁷

§ 634. — Questions of Law and Fact

In prosecutions for driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicants, questions of law are for the court, and questions of fact are for the jury.

As in other criminal cases, questions as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence⁷⁸ and the credibility of witnesses⁷⁹ are ordinarily for the jury, and, where the evidence is sufficient to be submitted to them,⁸⁰ it is for them to determine, on

Statements of accused

In prosecution for operating motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, the commonwealth was not bound by accused's statement which was offered in evidence, and jury could believe part of the statement and reject part, if it had ground for so doing.—*Commonwealth v. In Oklahoma

(1) It has been held that the term "under the influence of intoxicating liquor," as used in the statute, is of common usage and requires no definition or explanation to be understood by persons of ordinary intelligence, and it is not error for the court to fail to define or explain the term—Welch v. State, 277 P. 280, 43 Okl.Cr. 47.

(2) It has also been held that the court was not bound to define term "intoxicating liquor" for jury on defendant's request, since such term is self-definitive—Drew v. State, 112 P.2d 429, 71 Okl.Cr. 415.

(3) However, it has been held that it is much better practice for the court to give an instruction defining the term, especially if requested—Phenis v. State, 135 P.2d 62, 76 Okl. Cr. 156—Lucien v. State, 81 P.2d 323, 64 Okl.Cr. 382.

Alcoholic content of beer

Court properly refused to give motorist's requested instruction that under the law of the state three and mislead or confuse,⁴ or are on an issue not in dispute,⁵ or on a matter which is without record evidence on which they may be based,⁶ or give undue prominence or emphasis to particular matters,⁷ or merely state an abstract proposition,⁸ or where they are substantially covered by other instructions given by the court.⁹ However, requests which correctly state the law and are warranted by the pleadings and the evidence in the case, and which are not covered by other instructions given, should be given, and refusal thereof constitutes error.¹⁰

§ 636. — Verdict, Judgment, Sentence, and Punishment

- a. Verdict, judgment, and sentence
- b. Punishment

a. Verdict, Judgment, and Sentence

The general rules in criminal cases as to verdicts, judgments, and sentences apply in prosecutions for driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicants or drugs.

General rules apply to the verdict¹¹ and to the form and substance of a record of conviction¹² on a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated. The judgment and sentence following a conviction must be under, and pursuant to, the particular statute under which accused was prosecuted,¹³ and must be based or founded on a sufficient verdict,¹⁴ and be responsive thereto,¹⁵ and impose a certain and definite sentence in accordance with the law.¹⁶ An alternative or ambiguous sentence is improper.¹⁷

Subject to general rules, it has been held in a prosecution for driving an automobile while intoxicated that the refusal of the court to permit accused to introduce testimony and to present a plea for leniency, after conviction and before sentence was pronounced, in mitigation of punishment is not erroneous.¹⁸

Degree of offense. Reduction of the degree of the offense of driving a motor vehicle upon the highway while addicted to, or under the influence of, narcotic drugs from a felony to a misdemeanor has been held to be a question for the judgment and discretion of the trial court.¹⁹

two tenths percent beer was not intoxicating, and that, unless jury found that motorist was operating his automobile while under the influence of intoxicating liquor containing in excess of three and two tenths percent of alcohol, he should be acquitted.—Drew v. State, 112 P. 2d 429, 71 Okl. Cr. 415.—Daniels v. State, 98 P.2d 68, 68 Okl. Cr. 324.—Ashcraft v. State, 98 P.2d 60, 68 Okl. Cr. 308.

- (4) Matters to be considered in fixing punishment
- (5) Imprisonment for nonpayment of costs or fine

(1) In General

The penalty or punishment to be imposed for the violation of a statute prohibiting driving while intoxicated is that prescribed by statute.

The penalty or punishment to be imposed for the violation of a statute prohibiting driving while intoxicated is either prescribed by the statute which creates and defines the offense,²¹ or, where it does not do so, by the provisions of the general penal law prescribing the punishment for offenses for which no penalty is otherwise specially provided.²² In accordance with the general rules pertaining to the construction of statutes, a specific statutory provision which relates to drunken drivers alone, and which provides punishment therefor will prevail over a general statutory provision relating to violations of the law of the road, which imposes penalties only by reference to statutes that cover many separate violations of the law of the road.²³ The penalty or punishment imposed must not violate a constitutional provision prohibiting cruel and unusual punishments,²⁴ and it must not be excessive.²⁵ Where the place of imprisonment is prescribed by the statute, the court is without jurisdiction to direct imprisonment elsewhere.²⁶

Prohibiting driving. Under some statutes a person convicted of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated may be prohibited from driving²⁷ upon

Cruel and unusual punishments generally see Criminal Law § 1978.

Reason for increased punishment

The reason for increasing severity of punishment for driving while intoxicated is explained fully by the large death toll from automobile accidents. An automobile negligently driven is a dangerous instrumentality upon a public highway.—State v. Cantara, 148 A. 415, 50 R.I. 440.

the public highways of the state²⁸ for a specified period.

(2) Discretion of Court

Under some statutes the extent of the punishment is left to the discretion of the court within certain limits.

Some statutes leave the extent of punishment to the discretion of the court within certain limits,²⁹ but a trial judge cannot, in his discretion, impose a punishment different from that provided by the statute which prescribes it.³⁰ It has been held that, on a plea of guilty to a charge of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated, the court may in its discretion impose a fine, suspend prison sentence, and place accused on probation, and may subsequently vacate the probation and sentence him to imprisonment.³¹

Recommendation by jury. Under some statutes, the recommendation of the jury as to the punishment to be imposed is not binding on the court,³² and failure to follow it does not constitute an abuse of discretion.³³ Under other statutes the discretion of the court is limited to the imposition of a sentence which does not exceed the recommendation of the jury.³⁴

(3) Determination by Jury

Under some statutes the jury assesses the punishment, within prescribed limits.

Under a statute permitting a wide range in punishment for driving while intoxicated and authorizing the jury to make the punishment fit the crime, the gravity of the offense depends to a large extent on the facts and circumstances attending and resulting from its commission, and such matters should be considered by the jury in determining the appropriate punishment.³⁵ In assessing the punishment, the jury must stay within the limits prescribed by the statute,³⁶ and be free from bias, passion, or prejudice.³⁷

(4) Matters to Be Considered in Fixing Punishment

The attending circumstances may be considered by the court in fixing the punishment on conviction for driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicants.

Validity of statute

Statute prohibiting operation of motor vehicle while intoxicated and depriving person convicted thereunder of right to drive for specified period held valid exercise of police power, since court in which conviction is had has jurisdiction to enforce statute.—Smith v. State, supra.

Suspension of prison sentence

Under some statutes the trial court may restrain a motorist from driving an automobile within the state only if the sentence of imprisonment is suspended.—State v. Colohan, 286 N.W. 888, 69 N.D. 316.

Foreign license

The statute requiring magistrate to inform defendant, arraigned on charge of violating vehicle and traffic law, that his "license" to drive motor vehicle may or must be suspended or revoked on his conviction, does not require magistrate to inform defendant that driver's license issued to him by another state will be revoked, if he is convicted in the state on such charge as for operating motor vehicle while intoxicated.—People v. Bass, 72 N.Y.S.2d 479, 188 Misc. 875.

In Texas

(1) Under an earlier statute the judgment and sentence could prohibit defendant from driving for a specified period.—Sharp v. State, 94 S.W.2d 177, 130 Tex.Cr. 366—Williams v. State, 76 S.W.2d 511, 127 Tex.Cr. 299.

(2) This statute was repealed by a later statute providing for the automatic suspension of defendant's license on conviction; provision against driving may be included in the judgment, but is no longer necessary.—McIntire v. State, 117 S.W.2d 1093, 135 Tex.Cr. 245—Chaney v. State, 112 S.W.2d 464, 133 Tex.Cr. 517—Harris v. State, 109 S.W.2d 201, 133 Tex.Cr. 126—Harris v. State, 109 S.W.2d 203, 133 Tex.Cr. 129.

(3) The prohibition against driving, however, cannot be for a greater period than that specified in the statute.—Collins v. State, 115 S.W.2d 963, 134 Tex.Cr. 429—Schultz v. State, 115 S.W.2d 417, 134 Tex.Cr. 251—Hayes v. State, 115 S.W.2d 960, 134 Tex.Cr. 444—Chaney v. State, supra.

The offense of driving while intoxicated, even in its most mitigated form, has been held to involve so much of danger to human life as to call for severe punishment,³⁸ and, although in determining the punishment to be imposed the court should consider the attending circumstances,³⁹ the very nature of the offense is such that aggravation inheres in it,⁴⁰ and such punishment as tends to prevent a repetition of the crime should be imposed.⁴¹ The effect on the members of accused's family of a penitentiary sentence for one year for driving an automobile while intoxicated cannot be considered in determining whether such a sentence should be imposed.⁴² It has also been held, however, that a sentence of imprisonment in jail as well as the payment of a fine is improper in the case of a first offender of good repute, where the imprisonment of accused will inflict unusual hardship on his family.⁴³

(5) Imprisonment for Nonpayment of Costs or Fine

In the absence of statutory authorization therefor, the accused may not be imprisoned for nonpayment of a fine imposed on conviction for driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicants.

Unless and except as provided for by statute,⁴⁴ imprisonment for nonpayment of a fine or costs on conviction of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated is not authorized.⁴⁵ Where the term of imprisonment to be imposed for the nonpayment of a fine is prescribed and limited by statute, a judgment providing imprisonment until payment of the fine imposed is unauthorized.⁴⁶

and the presumptions or inferences indulged in by the reviewing court.⁵²

Under general rules, a judgment in a prosecution for driving while intoxicated will not be reversed for error which was not harmful or prejudicial to any substantial rights of accused,⁵³ or where it did not operate in a miscarriage of justice.⁵⁴

Determination and disposition of cause. Where a statute leaves the punishment for the offense of driving while intoxicated within the sound discretion of the trial court, the sentence imposed will not be reviewed by the supreme court on appeal where the exercise of such discretion has not been grossly and palpably abused.⁵⁵ However, if the punishment to which accused is sentenced is greater than that which the facts of the case seem to warrant, the appellate court may, by virtue of statutes in some jurisdictions, reverse, modify, or reduce the judgment,⁵⁶ but such procedure is unauthorized where the penalty imposed is an indeterminate sentence of imprisonment.⁵⁷ The appellate court will not hesitate to reverse if material error appears,⁵⁸ and a new trial will be awarded where the evidence is of such a character that it does not beyond all reasonable doubt prove guilt as charged.⁵⁹ An appeal will not be dismissed as moot, because accused has paid the fine and costs, where conviction makes revocation of his driver's license mandatory and where such conviction imposes a stigma on his name.⁶⁰ Where a majority of the reviewing court does not vote for a reversal, it has been held that the conviction will be affirmed.⁶¹

§ 638. Driving without License or Number Plates or Identification Marks; Unlawful Plates

- a. Driving without license or number plates or identification marks
- b. Unlawful use of license or number plates

a. Driving without License or Number Plates or Identification Marks

Under some statutes it is an offense to drive or operate a motor vehicle without displaying the prescribed license or number plates or other marks of identification.

The various statutes requiring registration of motor vehicles usually make it an offense to drive or operate vehicles without having displayed thereon the prescribed license or number plates or other marks of identification.⁶² Ordinarily the violation of such a statute is a misdemeanor.⁶³

(1) In prosecution against police officer for operating city's automobile without license tag, fact that commissioner refused to issue tag for statutory fee was no defense.—State v. Cahoon, 143 So. 253, 106 Fla. 299.

(2) When the owner of a motor vehicle has complied with every requirement of the statute necessary to entitle him to receive the number plates from the proper official and he fails to receive them only because such official is unable to furnish them, such facts constitute a defense to a charge of operating the vehicle without having the number plates displayed.—State v. Gish, 150 N.W. 37, 168 Iowa 70, Ann.Cas. 1917B 135.

Plates with advertising matter

Automobile owner who obtained a registration certificate but refused to accept license plates bearing words advertising a world's fair and continued to display plates for the former year on refusal of division of motor vehicles to issue plates without advertising matter, did not violate vehicle code provision requiring display of current year's license plates when and as required by the code, since the code did not authorize plates with such advertising matter.—People v. Kirby, 99 P.2d 603, 38 Cal.App.2d Supp. 763.

63. Okl.—Ex parte Frele, 274 P. 684, 42 Okl.Cr. 57.

Municipal misdemeanor

Notwithstanding a municipality has adopted an ordinance making all state misdemeanors also municipal misdemeanors, a municipal corporation cannot punish as a municipal misdemeanor the driving of a motor vehicle upon its streets without having it properly tagged in accordance with the state law.—Hattiesburg v. James, 99 So. 133, 134 Miss. 671.

A statute making it unlawful to operate a motor vehicle on a public street without having the license number plates displayed applies to the driver of the vehicle as well as to the owner.⁶⁴ One who operates a motor vehicle in violation of a statute requiring a display of the license plate on the vehicle may be convicted although the owner was riding with him at the time.⁶⁵ Where the statute includes municipally owned vehicles, the driver of such a vehicle may be convicted of a violation.⁶⁶

Intent. Whether under such statutes a specific criminal intent or guilty knowledge is an essential element of the offense is to be determined from the language of the statute in connection with its purpose and design.⁶⁷

An indictment or information must allege every fact necessary to constitute the offense charged and to bring accused within the statutory provisions.⁶⁸ Thus, under a statute forbidding the operation of a motor vehicle on a public highway without having the required license number plates attached, an information which fails to charge operation on a public highway is fatally defective.⁶⁹ Indictments or informations charging the operation of a motor vehicle without having the required license or number plates need not negative the exceptions made by the statute in favor of nonresidents.⁷⁰ There is no variance between an allegation of driving upon a public highway and proof that the place of the offense was upon a parkway which is nevertheless a public highway, although under the control of park commissioners.⁷¹

Trial. General rules apply as to the admissibility⁷² and the weight and sufficiency⁷³ of evidence, questions of fact,⁷⁴ and instructions.⁷⁵

Failure to produce registration

Under statute providing that failure to produce certificate of registration shall be presumptive evidence of displaying number plates not proper for the vehicle, where a motorist owned a certificate of registration at the time of his arrest, and the automobile displayed the corresponding number, failure to produce a certificate of registration on demand did not authorize a conviction for operating an automobile on the public highways without having a distinctive number corresponding to a certificate of registration displayed upon the automobile, since the statute prescribes a rule of evidence only.—People v. Obstructing license plates

(1) It has been held that a motorist operating his automobile with license plates from which the words "New York World's Fair 1939," required by statute to appear thereon, had been cut off was guilty of obstructing license plates.—People v. McClean, 3 N.Y.S.2d 314, 167 Misc 40.

(2) It has also been held, however, that a motorist who did not obstruct any part of number or year or state portion of license plate, but only covered up words "New York World's Fair 1939," was not guilty of obstructing license plates, since statute requiring quoted words on license plates was invalid.—People v.

Perkins, 1 N.Y.S.2d 940, 166 Misc. 320.

Jurisdiction

A prosecution for operating a motor vehicle displaying the license plate of another motor vehicle cannot be commenced in common pleas court, but only before a magistrate or justice of the peace.—Young v. State, 185 N.E. 208, 44 Ohio App 259.

Criminal responsibility

Defendant's criminal responsibility was not lessened by co-operation of another in operating automobile with wrong number plates.—State v. Duggee, 144 A 689, 101 Vt. 491.

Criminal intent

Accused, employed to drive another's car, and having no knowledge that license tag was a replaced tag, was not guilty of using replaced license tag, since no criminal intent was present.—Moore v. State, 152 So. 609, 26 Ala App. 60.

Indictment

(1) Indictment for unlawful use of motor vehicle registration plates need not identify with particularity registration plates or motor vehicle, and need not aver that plates were issued by state highway department.—Commonwealth v. Romesburg, 91 Pa Super. 559.

(2) Fact that indictment in prosecution for displaying wrong license number on automobile did not negative possibility that proper license was displayed was immaterial.—Clark v. State, 22 S.W.2d 361, 160 Tenn. 225.

Distinct offenses

Some statutes provide for two distinct offenses, one of operating a motor vehicle without a license, which is merely cognizable by summary proceeding, and the other of operating a motor vehicle after a license is revoked or suspended, which is a misdemeanor.—Commonwealth v. Krupa, 40 Pa.Dist. & Co. 572, 57 Montg.Co. 107—Commonwealth v. Gernert, 33 Pa.Dist. & Co. 620, 52 York Co. 89—Commonwealth v. Boyd, 2 Pa.Dist. & Co. 220.

Defenses

It is no defense that an operator's license had been applied for and issued and was in fact received by the operator the day following the violation.—Commonwealth v. Annasetti, 31 Pa.Dist. & Co. 407, 18 Wash. Co. 93.

Burden of proof

In prosecution for operating motor vehicle without license, provision of statute respecting exemption of non-resident owners is defensive matter which defendant must prove.—Cotton v. State, 133 So. 65, 24 Ala. App. 219.

(1) It has been held that holder of junior operator's license driving mother's automobile with parents' consent for purpose of procuring employment for himself during summer months was operating automobile in usual and ordinary pursuit of the business of parent within statute authorizing such operation of motor vehicle by holder of junior operator's license and that he was not guilty of misdemeanor of operating motor vehicle without a license.—*People v. Particular persons have been held to be subject⁷⁹ or not to be subject⁸⁰ to prosecution under such a statute. a. In General

The violation of various statutes or ordinances which regulate the speed at which motor vehicles may be operated on the public highways or streets constitutes an offense.

In many jurisdictions there are statutes or ordinances which regulate the speed of motor vehicles on the public highways and streets and make it an offense to violate their provisions.⁹⁸ It is, of course, essential that a statute, in order to authorize a punishment for excessive speeding, must create such an offense.⁹⁹ Statutes and ordinances creating such an offense have been held to be valid and enforceable¹ where they conform to the requirements of certainty and reasonableness.²

A speed regulation is to be construed in accordance with the intent of the legislators as ascertained from the object to be obtained and the evil to be remedied,³ and since the purpose of such laws is to prevent damage to the life or limb of any person, and to insure the safety of any property which may be on the highway,⁴ a construction will be adopted which will tend to attain such a result.⁵ On the other hand, it has also been held that, since such statutes or ordinances are penal in nature,⁶ they must be strictly construed.⁷

Definitions. Generally the words "motor vehicle," as used in a statute regulating the speed of motor vehicles, are sufficiently broad and comprehensive to include automobiles,⁸ and the words "ride or drive" are broad enough to apply in the case of motorcycles or automobiles when ridden or driven.⁹ However, the term "motor vehicle," as defined in some statutes, has been held not synonymous with the word "automobile."¹⁰ The words "public road or highway" in such a statute are synonymous with, or at least include, a public street,¹¹ and the expression "territory contiguous thereto" refers to the land lying immediately upon or adjacent to such highway.¹² The word "descent" as used in a speed regulation has been interpreted to mean, within the legislative intent, such an incline on the highway as is commonly denominated a "hill."¹³ In addition, various terms used in connection with the regulation of the speed of motor vehicles have been the subject of express definition.¹⁴ Where various parts of a statute regulating the speed of motor vehicles become operative at different times, a provision which defines the meanings of various terms thereafter used in the subsequent parts of the statute, and which went into effect at an earlier period, becomes applicable to the other provisions of the act whenever the latter go into effect.¹⁵

Grade of offense. Ordinarily a violation of the laws regulating the speed of motor vehicles is a misdemeanor.¹⁶ Thus, where the offense of driving an automobile at an excessive rate of speed is not punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, it is a misdemeanor and not a felony,¹⁷ but, where a statute also authorizes the graver punishment, the offense may constitute either a misdemeanor or a felony.¹⁸ Under some statutes a first violation of the speed laws is penalized by permitting a suit against the violator to recover a fine imposed by the statute,¹⁹ and it is only a second offense, committed after a former conviction, that is punishable in a criminal prosecution as a misdemeanor.²⁰

Separate offenses. Sometimes statutes and ordinances prescribe different rates of speed, in which event a single act of speeding may constitute an offense under both a municipal ordinance and the state law.²¹ Where a statute prescribes different rates of speed for designated districts or localities, each provision creates a separate and distinct offense,²² and the rule is the same where a speed regulation is contained in a section of the statute dealing with matters of regulation other than speed.²³

b. Particular Statutory Provisions

- (1) Statutes prescribing definite speed limit
- (2) Statutes not prescribing definite speed limit

(1) Statutes Prescribing Definite Speed Limit

Some statutes or ordinances make it an offense to operate a motor vehicle in excess of a prescribed rate of speed in particular places and under certain circumstances.

Some statutes or ordinances make it an offense to operate a motor vehicle in excess of a prescribed rate of speed in various places and under certain circumstances,²⁴ such as on a public highway,²⁵ in a town,²⁶ in a closely built-up portion of a village or city,²⁷ in a residence district,²⁸ or in a school zone,²⁹ or on approaching and traversing a sharp curve in the road,³⁰ or in turning a corner of meeting highways,³¹ or in crossing such intersections,³² or in driving down a descent or incline in the road.³³

Passing other vehicles. Some statutes provide that a person operating a motor vehicle shall, on approaching another vehicle, animal, or person, reduce the speed of the vehicle to a specified rate of speed and shall not exceed such speed until entirely past such vehicle, animal, or person.³⁴

Computation. Some statutes prescribe the manner in which speed is to be timed under various conditions for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not there has been a violation of a speed limit.³⁵ Under such statutes, when the rate of speed is timed on a highway within a business or residence district where official speed signs are erected, the time is required to be taken by at least two peace officers, one of whom shall be stationed at each end

Vehicle proceeding in same direction
In construing such a statute, in which the rate of speed in passing was fixed at eight miles per hour, the speed limit was held not to apply to the passing of a horse-drawn vehicle proceeding in the same direction.—State v. Pfeiffer, supra—42 C.J. p 1343 note 60.

of a measured stretch;³⁶ and under all other conditions the rate of speed is required to be timed by a peace officer using a motor vehicle equipped with a speedometer tested for accuracy within a prescribed period prior to the alleged violation.³⁷

Distance traveled. Where a statute limits the lawful rate of speed to a certain distance in a specified time, as, for example, one mile in a given number of minutes, or a given number of miles per hour, that which is prohibited is the excessive rate of speed and not its continuance for any specified distance,³⁸ and it is, therefore, not necessary to constitute the offense that accused should have operated his car at the excessive speed for the space of a full mile.³⁹

Erection of speed signs. Where a statute which establishes a maximum speed limit of general application permits a lower rate of speed for highways in dangerous or closely built-up sections, but requires the local authorities to erect signs on the highways where the lower speed rate is to prevail, the erection of such signs, in conformity with the requirement of the statute, is a condition precedent to the effectiveness of the lower speed limit within such areas.⁴⁰ Accordingly, if such signs are not erected, the maximum speed rate established by the statute prevails,⁴¹ and the operation of a vehicle on the highway at such a point in excess of the reduced or lower rate of speed but within the maximum rate does not constitute an offense in violation of the statute.⁴² The proper placing of the prescribed signs constitutes actual notice to a motorist of the reduced or lower speed limit⁴³ whether or not seen,⁴⁴ but such signs must be constructed in the manner and form required by the statute.⁴⁵

(2) Statutes Not Prescribing Definite Speed Limit

It may be an offense to operate a motor vehicle on a highway in violation of statutory provisions which do not prescribe a definite speed limit.

It may be an offense to violate statutory provisions which do not prescribe a definite speed limit,⁴⁶ such as to operate a motor vehicle on a highway at a speed greater⁴⁷ or less⁴⁸ than is reasonable and proper, having regard for the traffic, surface, and width of the highway, and any other restrictions or conditions then and there existing,

36. Pa.—Commonwealth v. Wolfgang, supra.

Purpose

The purpose of such a provision is to abolish "speed traps" in smaller villages and boroughs.—Commonwealth v. Wolfgang, supra.

Rural sections

Such provision does not authorize use of officers at each end of measured stretch in apprehension of speed limit violators in rural sections.—Commonwealth v. Wolfgang, supra.

Substantial compliance

In order to sustain a conviction it must be shown that the stretch was properly measured, and, while it is not necessary that an officer be stationed precisely at each end of the measured stretch, at least substantial compliance with this requirement is indispensable, and the stationing of an officer some one hundred feet from a terminus is not substantial compliance.—Commonwealth v. Intersection

Under some ordinances it is an offense to violate a regulation requiring the operator of a motor vehicle approaching an intersection to slow down and keep his vehicle under such control as to avoid colliding with pedestrians or vehicles.—Lohman v. District of Columbia, D. C. Mun. App., 51 A.2d 382.

Statute held inapplicable

A statute which makes it an offense to operate a motor vehicle on the public highways at a rate of speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to traffic and the use of the way, or so as to endanger the property, life, or limb of any person, is intended as a regulation of the speed of automobiles on highways, and has been held not to apply to the mistake of an inexperienced driver, who, while learning to operate an automobile, unintentionally backed his car upon the sidewalk.—People v. Ribstein, 234 Ill. App. 440.

48. Ohio.—Justin v. City of Cincinnati, 28 Ohio N.P.N.S. 309.

or to operate a motor vehicle at such a speed as to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person,⁴⁹ or to operate a vehicle at a speed greater than will permit bringing it to a stop within the assured clear distance ahead.⁵⁰

Where a statute provides that a motor vehicle shall not be operated at a speed greater than is reasonable and proper with regard to circumstances named, or in any event upon the public highway in designated localities at a greater than a specified rate of speed, the "reasonable and proper" clause does not enlarge the maximum rate established by the statute but is a limitation on the right to operate at such a rate,⁵¹ and the driving of an automobile at a speed in excess of the maximum rate prescribed for the particular locality constitutes an offense under the statute irrespective of any question as to whether such speed was reasonable and proper.⁵²

Prima facie evidence provisions. Where a statute contains a proviso that the driving at a speed in excess of a given rate upon the highways generally, or in designated areas, shall constitute prima facie or presumptive evidence of a rate of speed that is greater than is reasonable or proper under the law,⁵³ it does not establish an absolute or fixed speed limit in any locality at which automobiles may be operated,⁵⁴ but the offense consists in the driving of an automobile at a rate of speed greater than is reasonable and proper with regard to the circumstances named in the statute irrespective of any particular rate of speed.⁵⁵ Thus the fact that the rate specified in the prima facie clause has been exceeded does not in itself establish an offense, for, if the presumption arising from such excessive speed is overcome by evidence that the automobile was operated at a reasonable and proper rate under the circumstances, there has been no violation of the statute.⁵⁶ On the other hand, if an automobile is operated at a speed greater than is reasonable or proper, it may constitute an offense even though the actual speed of the vehicle was less than the rate set out in the prima facie clause.⁵⁷

Under some statutes intent is not an element of the offense of driving at an excessive speed.

A statute which makes it an offense to operate a motor vehicle at a greater than a specified rate of speed does not make the intent of the driver an element of the offense,⁵⁸ and the only intention necessary to render a violator liable is the doing of the prohibited act.⁵⁹ It has been held, however, that, where the statute creating the offense provides punishment only for a willful violation, no offense has been committed unless the act of speeding was willfully done.⁶⁰

Ordinarily the only person liable for a violation of a speed statute is the one who was actually operating the motor vehicle at the time.

Ordinarily the only person liable for a violation of a speed statute is the one who was actually operating the vehicle at the time.⁶¹ It has been held, however, that one who, being present in the car, such as the owner, participates in, or is responsible for, the running of the machine at the illegal rate of speed may also be guilty.⁶² Where the offense is a misdemeanor, all who participate in its commission are principals and may be charged and convicted as such.⁶³ Under a statute which prohibits the owner of a motor vehicle, who is riding therein, to cause or permit it to proceed at a

Construction

The phrase "prima facie unlawful," as used in the section of statute providing that it shall be "prima facie unlawful" for a person to exceed any of the enumerated speed limitations for drivers of vehicles, does not carry any implication that the act of exceeding the speed limit is purged of unlawfulness because, notwithstanding such excessive speed, care is used in driving.—Baker v. greater speed than that prescribed, an owner riding in his automobile is liable for a violation by his chauffeur of a regulation as to speed at which a street corner may be turned.⁶⁴

Exemptions. Police officers in the discharge of their duty⁶⁵ or members of the military or naval service of the United States acting in case of military necessity in time of war⁶⁶ are not chargeable with a violation of speed regulations, although no specific exemption may be made in their favor. The operator of a government mail truck has been held not exempt from such a regulation.⁶⁷ A physician is not exempt from such regulation unless the regulation so provides,⁶⁸ although he may sometimes be excused, within the discretion of court, for a violation committed while hastening to a bona fide emergency case.⁶⁹

Any valid defense may be interposed in a prosecution for a violation of a speed statute.

Any valid defense may be interposed in a prosecution for a violation of a speed statute.⁷⁰ Control of the vehicle by a third person riding in it does not relieve the driver from liability⁷¹ unless he was acting under duress.⁷² The exercise of care by accused is not a defense to driving at a speed in excess of the maximum fixed by statute,⁷³ although it may be where the charge is of operating a vehicle at a speed greater than was reasonable and proper under the circumstances.⁷⁴ Violations by the other drivers without molestation are no defense,⁷⁵ nor is the fact that speed was occasioned by an attempt to elude service of a warrant⁷⁶ or to escape an unlawful arrest.⁷⁷ If a statute creating the offense is repealed without a saving clause, there can be no prosecution or punishment for a violation of it before the repeal,⁷⁸ even though a prosecution has been begun,⁷⁹ and, of course, where the repealing statute went into effect before the commission of the offense no prosecution or conviction can be maintained.⁸⁰

§ 645. — Notice of Intended Prosecution

Matters with respect to arrests for violations of the laws relating to the operation of motor vehicles are discussed in Arrest § 1 et seq. Proceedings preliminary to a criminal prosecution generally are considered in Criminal Law §§ 300-366.

with certainty⁸⁸ so as to inform accused of the charge which he has to meet.⁸⁴

An information must identify the particular speed law whose provision accused is charged with violating,⁸⁵ and, where the offense is created by an ordinance enacted under a statute prescribing certain conditions precedent to the operation of such ordinance, the information must set forth the due adoption of the ordinance⁸⁶ and the performance of all the requirements of the statute.⁸⁷

Erection of speed limit signs. Where the effectiveness of a local speed regulation depends on the placing of speed limit signs on the highway, the information must allege the erection of a sign with the inscription required by the statute at the place where the excessive speed was to be reduced.⁸⁸ However, where the statute required the placing of such signs only in certain territories outside of city limits, the erection of the signs need not be alleged when the charge is of speeding within the city limits.⁸⁹

Intent. If required by the statute, an information in an unlawful speed prosecution must charge a willful violation of the speed law.⁹⁰

Place. Generally, where the commission of the offense of speeding as defined by the statute depends on the character of the place where the act was done, the place of commission must be alleged.⁹¹ There need be no allegation, however, as to the particular point or place at which the alleged offense was committed where the act charged is a violation of the law if committed anywhere within the jurisdiction.⁹² So, where an ordinance prohibits the operation of an automobile above a prescribed rate of speed in the built-up portions of the city, it is sufficient to allege that the act was committed within "the built up portion of the city" and within the corporate limits thereof,⁹³ it being unnecessary to allege upon what particular street in the corporate limits the unlawful speeding was done.⁹⁴ In a prosecution for exceeding the speed limit on a highway where the contiguous territory is closely built up in violation of a statute defining such territory, it is unnecessary for the complaint to specify in what manner the highway therein described was closely built up.⁹⁵ Similarly, although the phrase "closely built up" as used in a speed regulation is separately defined by the statute with reference to the residential and business portions, it is unnecessary for a complaint charging a violation on a particular highway in a city to furnish information in addition in order to enable defendant to ascertain whether he is charged with exceeding the statutory speed limit in a business or in a residential section of the city.⁹⁶

Rate of speed. An averment as to the speed alleged to have been unlawful has been held essential.⁹⁷

Second offense. Where a prosecution as a misdemeanor is authorized only on a second violation of the speed laws, the information must contain an allegation to the effect that this was accused's second offense.⁹⁸

Language of statute. Generally a complaint, information, or indictment charging the offense of unlawful speeding in the language of the statute or ordinance creating the offense,⁹⁹ or in substantially similar language,¹ is sufficient. Where such statute or ordinance, however, fails to set out the facts constituting the offense sufficiently to apprise accused of the precise nature of the charge against him,² or so that he may be able to avail himself of his acquittal or conviction as a protection against further prosecution for the same offense,³ a more particular statement of the necessary facts will be required in the charge.⁴

Where a statute applicable to all public highways prohibits the driving of motor vehicles at a speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic, use of the way, etc., an information in the language of the statute is sufficient, although it does not charge the character of the public way⁵ or specify with further particularity the circumstances and conditions existing on the highway which rendered the speed unreasonable or improper.⁶

Bill of particulars. Subject to the general rules pertaining to the allowance of bills of particulars in criminal prosecutions, where a party accused of a speed violation cannot prepare his defense because of lack of information or particularity in the averments of the charge, he may demand a bill of particulars,⁷ and on a proper showing the prosecuting attorney will be required to furnish him therewith.⁸

Issues, proof, and variance. As in the case of criminal prosecutions generally, the evidence in a prosecution for a violation of a speed law must conform to the allegations of the information.⁹

§ 647. — Evidence

- a. Presumptions and burden of proof
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

Subject to statutory variations, general rules apply with respect to presumptions and burden of proof in a prosecution for a violation of a speed statute.

In a prosecution for a violation of a speed statute, the burden is on the prosecution to establish all the essential elements of the offense¹⁰ and the guilt of accused.¹¹ It must establish that the particular statute on which the prosecution is based was violated¹² by accused,¹³ that the place of the commission of the alleged offense of speeding was within the venue as laid,¹⁴ and that it was com-

Speed need not be specified

An information, under a statutory provision which does not prescribe a definite speed limit, need not specify the speed at which accused was traveling.—Commonwealth v. Weber, 33 Pa. Dist. & Co. 488, 30 Mun. L.R. 93.

Accuracy of officer's speedometer

In some jurisdictions the prosecution has the burden of showing that the officer's speedometer has been tested for accuracy as prescribed by statute.—Commonwealth v. Leitzel, 40 Pa. Dist. & Co. 410—Commonwealth v. Penman, 36 Pa. Dist. & Co. 634—Commonwealth v. Harvey, Pa. Com.Pl., 49 Dauph.Co. 43.

mitted within the statutory period of limitations before the commencement of the prosecution.¹⁵ Where the placing of speed-limit signs is required by the statute, the erection of the proper signs must be established.¹⁶ The knowledge of the driver as to the provisions of a statute limiting the speed of motor vehicles is presumed.¹⁷

In a prosecution for violation of a municipal ordinance, the burden of showing that a legal ordinance has been duly adopted and that statutory requirements relating to its enactment have been duly complied with rests on the prosecution,¹⁸ unless such facts are admitted,¹⁹ and a conviction without such proof cannot be sustained.²⁰

Exemption. The burden of proving that he is exempt from liability to prosecution has been held to be on accused.²¹

Unnecessary allegations. Although it was unnecessary to the charging of an offense to allege upon what particular street in the jurisdiction the act of unlawful speeding was committed, where an indictment charges the crime as done upon a named street, the prosecution must prove that the act charged was done upon the street alleged.²² However, an information alleging that the act of speeding occurred upon a public highway within the jurisdiction of a park commission need not be proved, where there is another allegation in the information that the violation occurred upon a public highway in the city and that fact was proved.²³

Under prima facie evidence provisions. In a prosecution under a statute which makes it an offense to drive an automobile at a speed greater than is reasonable and proper under the circumstances and also provides that driving in excess of certain rates of speed in designated localities shall be prima facie or presumptive evidence that the motor vehicle is being operated at the prohibited rate of speed, proof that accused operated an automobile at a rate of speed in excess of that specified in the statute does not establish the commission of an offense by him,²⁴ but merely establishes a prima facie case.²⁵ Such a provision is merely a rule of evidence,²⁶ raising a rebuttable presumption,²⁷ which may be overcome by the evidence.²⁸ The operation of this statutory presumption does not change the burden on the prosecution to prove the guilt of accused,²⁹ but simply requires that in the absence of explanatory or contradictory evidence the finding shall be in accordance with the proof establishing the prima facie case.³⁰ Where a prima facie case under the statute is made out, and accused offers no evidence to meet it, the prima facie case becomes conclusive and justifies a finding of guilty.³¹

In the absence of special statutory provisions, the rules governing the admissibility of evidence in criminal cases generally apply to a prosecution for a violation of the speed laws.

Evidence based on use of speed traps
Under some statutes which have the rules governing the admissibility of evidence in criminal cases apply to prosecutions for violation of the speed laws.³³ Measurements obtained by use of a speedometer have been held admissible to show the rate of speed at which an automobile was being driven.³⁴ Evidence that a certain make of speedometer is in use in many police departments in official testing is not admissible to prove the accuracy of this kind of speedometer in general or of the particular one in question.³⁵ A statutory provision that an official certificate as to the accuracy of a speedometer on an officer's motor vehicle shall be competent and prima facie evidence of the fact has been held to be invalid.³⁶

c. Weight and Sufficiency

In the absence of special statutes, the rules governing the weight and sufficiency of the evidence in criminal cases apply in a prosecution for a violation of a speed statute.

In the absence of special statutes,³⁷ the rules governing the weight and sufficiency of the evidence in criminal cases apply in determining whether the evidence in a prosecution for a violation of a speed statute is sufficient to sustain a conviction.³⁸ These general rules also control as to the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the essential facts necessary to constitute the offense charged and to authorize a prosecution therefor,³⁹ such as jurisdiction or venue,⁴⁰ the existence of the speed ordinance on which the prosecution is based,⁴¹ the identity⁴² and participation⁴³ of accused, the been held valid, evidence of speed violations obtained by operation of speed traps is declared incompetent and inadmissible in the trial of the person arrested for such offense.—Fleming v. Orange County Super Ct., 238 P. 88, 196 Cal. 344.

Testimony held competent

Testimony of officer arresting speeder while on highway for purpose disconnected with vehicle act was held competent, even though he used automobile without distinctive color.—People v. Stewart, 288 P. 57, 107 Cal.App. Supp. 757.

The statute providing that speed in excess of that determined by commissioner of motor vehicles shall be prima facie evidence that such speed is not reasonable and safe, means that it shall be evidence sufficient to support a verdict if one should be found.—State v. Langley, 26 A.2d 368, 92 N.H. 136.

Unsupported evidence of one officer

§ 648. — Questions of Law and Fact

In a prosecution for unlawful speeding it is the province of the jury, where the evidence is conflicting and is sufficient to warrant a submission to them, to determine questions of fact.

In a prosecution for unlawful speeding it is the province of the jury, where the evidence is conflicting and is sufficient to warrant a submission to them,⁴⁶ or for the court, trying a case without a jury, to determine as a question of fact such matters as the rate of speed at which the vehicle in question was being driven;⁴⁷ whether the speed was greater than was reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and other circumstances;⁴⁸ the amount of traffic upon the highway at the time of the alleged violation;⁴⁹ and the accuracy of the speedometer used by a witness.⁵⁰ Where a prima facie case is established by virtue of a statutory provision⁵¹ and evidence is introduced in rebuttal, it becomes a question for the jury, or the court trying the case without a jury, to decide on the whole evidence whether the presumption raised by the prima facie case has been overcome.⁵²

The court should instruct the jury fully and correctly with respect to the law of the case.

In accordance with the rules applicable in criminal cases generally the court, in a prosecution for unlawful speeding, should submit the case to the jury with full and accurate instructions applicable to the issues, and should not give instructions which are misleading or erroneous.⁵³

§ 650. — Judgment, Sentence, Punishment, and Review

- a. Judgment, sentence, and punishment
- b. Review

a. Judgment, Sentence, and Punishment

General rules usually apply with respect to judgment, sentence, and punishment in a prosecution for violating the speed laws.

General rules usually apply with respect to a judgment of conviction or sentence in a prosecution for a violation of the speed laws.⁵⁴ Under a penal statute which prohibits more than one punishment for single acts which may constitute distinct offenses under different provisions of law, it is improper for a court to render two separate sentences of conviction in a prosecution for a single act of speeding within a municipality which constituted a violation of both the municipal and state speed laws.⁵⁵ In such a case the trial court can properly proceed under either the state law or the municipal ordinance, but not under both.⁵⁶ It is not necessary to fix and determine the number of days of imprisonment as the alternative in a sentence for unlawful speeding where the statute itself provides for this.⁵⁷ Similarly, in the judgment for a conviction obtained in a summary proceeding for the collection of a penalty for unlawful speeding, it is not necessary to state to whom the fine is payable where the statute itself specifies the party entitled.⁵⁸ Where an accused is being tried for a second offense and is liable, therefore, to a more severe punishment, it has been held that everything necessary to authorize the higher penalty should be distinctly found by the magistrate so that it may clearly appear that the sentence is

Punishment. The penalty or punishment to be imposed for a violation of the speed laws is that prescribed by statute or ordinance,⁶⁰ and may be a fine,⁶¹ or imprisonment,⁶² or both.⁶³ A penalty which is excessive or unauthorized cannot be enforced.⁶⁴ Thus, where a statute prescribes a maximum penalty for a first offense and authorizes more severe punishments for second or subsequent offenses, the more severe punishment may not be inflicted on a first offender.⁶⁵ So, where a second offense, in order to be punishable as such, must have been committed within a period of one year, a fine as for a second offense cannot be sustained where it does not appear that the offense was committed within such period.⁶⁶ Similarly, where the jurisdiction of a court as to the punishment it may inflict is limited, it cannot impose a greater penalty, even though the speed statute authorizes a punishment in excess of the court's jurisdiction.⁶⁷

Where accused has several times previously been convicted of operating his automobile at an illegal rate of speed, it is within the discretion of the court under some statutes to punish him by imprisonment,⁶⁸ and a jail sentence so imposed which is warranted by the circumstances of the case will be affirmed.⁶⁹

b. Review

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the general rules of review in criminal cases apply as to a review of a conviction for the violation of the speed laws.

Matters relating to a review by a higher court of a conviction for the violation of the speed laws are governed, in the absence of special statutes, by the rules and statutes applicable to a review in criminal prosecutions generally.⁷⁰ This is true

Suspension of license

In prosecution for speeding, where jury found motorist guilty, imposed a fine, and suspended driver's license, and ordinance invested judge, alone, with power to order suspension of license on conviction, and court, in entering judgment, included an order for suspension, suspension was effective, and jury's verdict as to suspension was at most a recommendation.—Schwaller v. Suspension of fine

(1) The suspension of a fine for speeding could not legally be conditioned on the filing by accused of a public liability insurance policy.—City of Rochester v. Drummond, 11 N.Y.S.2d 725, 171 Misc. 13.

(2) Where accused, convicted for speeding, was a dealer in used automobiles and carried a blanket liability policy on all his automobiles, requiring him to procure another public liability policy was so unreasonable that such action could not properly be required as condition of suspension of his fine.—City of Rochester v. Drummond, supra.

Option as to payment of fine

In prosecution for speeding, municipal court had no power in imposing fine to give accused privilege of either paying fine or relieving himself of paying part of it by filing public liability policy with court, or of the whole of it by leaving operator's license with court for period of sixty days during which time accused should not drive automobile.—City of Rochester v. Newton, 8 N.Y.S.2d 441, 169 Misc. 726.

70. Appeal

(1) On appeal from a judgment of conviction for violation of a city speed ordinance, the cause becomes quasi-criminal, and is triable de novo with city as plaintiff, accused becomes bound for the penalty assessed in the circuit court, and judgment may be entered against him for penalty and costs, instead of the fine or a sentence therefor.—Chergotakos v. City of Gadsden, 166 So. 434, 27 Ala.App. 100.

(2) In the absence of a statute giving the right of an appeal to a municipality in prosecutions for violation of its speed ordinances, no appeal will lie from a judgment of the lower court discharging accused in such a prosecution.—Alabama City v. Allen, 108 So. 267, 21 Ala.App. 332.

(3) A motion to amend affidavit, charging operation of automobile on city streets at speed in violation of ordinance, on appeal from conviction before mayor, was properly overruled where it was not shown that amended affidavit would charge offense under ordinance.—City of Pascagoula v. Rogers, 184 So. 433, 183 Miss. 323.

(4) In prosecution for speed, where judgment of conviction imposed fine and ordered suspension of driver's license under power given to judge by city ordinance, and, on appeal, motorist posted supersedeas bond, execution of judgment as to suspension was thereby stayed pending appeal, as well as to imposition of fine, so that arrest and detention of motorist for offense of driving automobile while license was suspended, prior to appeal, was an unlawful deprivation of liberty.—Schwaller v. May, 115 S.W.2d 207, 234 Mo.App. 185.

Certiorari

A writ of certiorari will be awarded where the information does not contain a reference to the section and subsection of the speed statute alleged to be violated.—Commonwealth v. Radomski, 55 D. & C. 77, 62 Montg. Co. 9, 38 Mun.L.R. 156.

as to such matters as the scope of review on certiorari,⁷¹ the presumptions or inference indulged by the reviewing court,⁷² the presentation in the lower court of the grounds of review by appropriate motions, demurrers, objections, and exceptions,⁷³ and as to the waiver of the right to raise the question as to the manner in which the review was presented.⁷⁴

Determination and disposition of cause. The judgment will be affirmed where no error appears⁷⁵ and there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict.⁷⁶ In the absence of anything to indicate that the trial court was hostile⁷⁷ or that the jurors were prejudiced or received improper impressions,⁷⁸ a verdict or finding will not be reversed except for the best of reasons. A conviction will not be sustained, however, by a reviewing court where the information on which the prosecution is based does not state a crime⁷⁹ or where the record fails to set forth all the facts necessary to sustain the conviction.⁸⁰ The judgment may be modified in a proper case.⁸¹

Badge reading "Inspector, Registry of Motor Vehicles" and worn by person making demand on motorist to produce license to operate motor vehicle was not such a "badge" as disclosed to the motorist that the person making the demand had the powers of a police officer and the displaying of such a badge by an investigator was not in conformity with statute making it an offense on part of motorist to refuse to comply with demand of police officer, who displays his badge to produce license to operate motor vehicle.—Commonwealth v. Sullivan, 40 N.E.2d 261, 311 Mass. 177.

Complaint

A complaint charging operation of automobile and failure to display operator's license on demand by peace officer was insufficient to charge an offense under statute requiring a license to be carried and exhibited on demand, in absence of allegation that accused was, on date of alleged offense, a licensee.—Barber v. State, Tex.Cr., 191 S.W.2d 879.

The failure of the operator of a motor vehicle to exhibit his operator's license or registration when requested by a peace officer or other authorized person is an offense under some statutes,⁸² and such statutes have been held applicable to all persons coming within their terms and not exempt therefrom either by the express terms of the statute or by necessary implication.⁸³ Under other statutes such a failure has been held not a criminal offense,⁸⁴ but only prima facie evidence that the operator has not obtained a license.⁸⁵

Statutes providing that the failure by an operator of a motor vehicle to exhibit his license or registration to any magistrate, motor vehicle inspector, police officer, constable, or other competent authority shall be presumptive evidence that such person is not duly licensed prescribe a rule of evidence only, and one who has a license cannot be convicted simply because he fails on demand of a police officer to exhibit it.—People v. In a prosecution for violation of an ordinance requiring drivers of motor vehicles turning to the right at a street intersection to remain as close as possible to the right-hand curb, it was no justification to accused that the space close to the curb was occupied by persons alighting from or boarding a streetcar and that if he had not passed to the left of the streetcar he would have had to stop his automobile or slow down and wait for the way to be clear.—Oshkosh v. Hugon, 114 P.2d 84, 45 Cal.App.2d Supp. 817.

(2) The statute providing that, except when overtaking and passing on the right is permitted, the driver of an overtaken vehicle shall give way to the right in favor of the overtaking vehicle on audible signal and shall not increase his speed until completely passed by the overtaking vehicle, does not limit the effect of the statute requiring an automobile to be driven on the right half of and as close as practicable to the right-hand curb or edge of the roadway.—*People v. § 655. Failing to Protect Edge of Pavement

Under some statutes it is an offense to operate a metal-tired vehicle of more than a certain weight over the edge of a paved highway without protecting such edge.

Under some statutes it is made an offense to operate a metal-tired vehicle of more than a certain weight over the edge of a paved highway without protecting such edge so as to prevent the vehicle from breaking off the corners.⁹⁶ In a prosecution under such a statute, evidence to the effect that the highways were used constantly for the hauling of horse-drawn vehicles with loads exceeding the limit named in the statute is properly excluded,⁹⁷ as is also evidence that certain highways were also generally used for the purpose of moving houses and heavy machinery.⁹⁸

§ 656. Failing to Stop on Signal of Driver of Animals; Frightening Animals

Some statutes make it an offense for the driver or operator of a motor vehicle to fail to stop on a signal given by a person riding or driving animals along a highway.

Some statutes make it an offense for the driver or operator of a motor vehicle to fail to stop on a signal given by one riding or driving animals along a highway.⁹⁹ It has been held that such a statute will not be construed to require the danger signal to be given by the driver or manager of the animal in person but will permit it to be given by any occupant of the vehicle,¹ although the contrary has also been held.² A charge of such an offense should follow the statute in stating the essentials thereof.³ The admission of evidence of the speed of the motor vehicle has been held proper in a prosecution under such a statute.⁴

Under other statutes it is made an offense to fail to exercise all reasonable precautions to prevent the frightening of an approaching horse and to insure the safety of any person riding or driving it.⁵ The charge under such a statute should state the name of the person alleged to have been injured,⁶ and the evidence should show that defendant was in control of the motor vehicle or was operating it.⁷ A statute requiring the giving of reasonable warning on approaching a pedestrian or a horse or horses or other draft animals being ridden or driven on the highway will not be so construed as to protect pedestrians only.⁸ An indictment alleging a violation of a statute requiring the giving of warning and the use of precaution to prevent frightening horses or other draft animals need not allege specifically the manner in which animals became frightened or the manner in which their driver was injured, since the offense consists in the failure to signal.⁹

particular case as they are applied to the statutes defining the different grades of homicide.¹¹ In determining the question whether the causing of a death by means of a motor vehicle constitutes a criminal homicide, the driver of the vehicle should be charged with the natural and reasonable consequences of his conduct,¹² but a motor vehicle is not to be classed in the same category with deadly weapons.¹³ General statutes governing criminal homicides apply to homicides caused by the operation of motor vehicles, even though such statutes were enacted prior to the time when motor vehicles were invented.¹⁴ Also, a special statute dealing with homicides caused by the operation of motor vehicles has been held not to preclude the application of a general homicide statute to a situation that is not covered by the special statute.¹⁵

The corpus delicti in a prosecution for a homicide caused by the operation of a motor vehicle consists of the killing of deceased as a proximate result of a collision with, or the instrumentality of, a motor vehicle driven or operated in one of the modes specified.¹⁶

(1) Murder

The intentional killing of a human being through the agency or operation of a motor vehicle, or a killing thereby under circumstances equivalent to an intentional killing or evincing depravity of mind, may constitute murder.

In general an intentional killing of a human being by means of the operation or driving of a motor vehicle constitutes murder.¹⁸ Accordingly, in the absence of any circumstances of justification or excuse, a driver of a motor vehicle may be adjudged guilty of murder where he knowingly operates his vehicle toward and against another person with intent to run him down,¹⁹ or with reckless disregard for his life,²⁰ or where he intentionally runs into an obstruction causing a passenger to be thrown from the car,²¹ and thereby causes his death. Also, a homicide resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle in violation of law may be adjudged murder where the unlawful manner of operation is such as naturally tends to destroy human life;²² and, under some statutes, in order to make a case of murder against a motorist driving in an unlawful and negligent manner, it must appear that such conduct was directly perilous to human life or that human life would probably be endangered thereby.²³ Under statutes making a homicide murder when committed by acts greatly dangerous to others and evincing depravity of mind, a driver is guilty of the crime when he operates his motor vehicle at high speed or otherwise negligently or unlawfully, without regard to the presence or lives of other persons, and kills a human being,²⁴ although he had no preconceived purpose to kill anyone.²⁵

(2) Manslaughter

One who through the agency, or in the operation, of a motor vehicle unintentionally causes the death of a human being by act or conduct which, although sufficient to impose criminal liability therefor, is not such as to make the offense murder or some other specific grade of criminal homicide, is guilty of manslaughter, or of some grade or degree thereof.

Ordinarily, one who through the agency, or in the operation, of a motor vehicle causes the death of a human being under circumstances such as to impose criminal liability therefor is guilty of manslaughter, or some grade or degree thereof, where the act or conduct causing the death is not such as to make the offense murder or some other specific grade of criminal homicide.²⁶ Subject to the terms of the statute under which prosecution is brought, the offense is manslaughter, involuntary manslaughter, or manslaughter of a grade equivalent to the common-law offense of manslaughter where the death is caused, without malice and without any intention to kill, under circumstances such that the act or conduct constitutes negligence of a grade or degree sufficient to impose criminal liability,²⁷ or while engaged in the commission of an unlawful act²⁸ not amounting to a felony,²⁹ or without due care and caution and in violation of statutes or ordinances,³⁰ or in the commission of a lawful act in an unlawful or negligent manner, or without due caution and circumspection.³¹ It has been held that, if one operates a motor vehicle upon the highway in a manner that he knows or has reasonable grounds to believe is reasonably calculated to injure others using the highway, and under such circumstances recklessly, wantonly, and with gross carelessness strikes and kills another, he is guilty of voluntary manslaughter.³²

Essential element

Under some statutes, the death of a human being in consequence of an unlawful act is an essential element of the crime of involuntary manslaughter, and constitutes the very essence of the crime.—Commonwealth v. Aurick, 19 A.2d 920, 342 Pa. 282—Commonwealth v. Delucese, 38 A.2d 494, 155 Pa. Super. 120—Commonwealth v. Stosny, 31 A.2d 582, 152 Pa. Super. 236

Conviction of unlawful act is not required.—Commonwealth v. Kurtz, 33 Pa. Dist. & Co. 661

Time when act became unlawful

Any act contrary to law, whether or not unlawful at the time the manslaughter statute was enacted, is within the rule.—Commonwealth v. Aurick, 10 A.2d 22, 138 Pa. Super. 180.

Violation of ordinance

It has been held that the unlawful act must be an act prohibited by statute or general principle of law, as distinguished from an act prohibited by a municipal ordinance.

Lingman, 91 P.2d 457, 97 Utah 180.

(3) Other Homicides

Under some statutes, one who causes the death of a human being by the negligent or other specified operation of a motor vehicle is guilty of the crime of negligent homicide, reckless homicide, involuntary homicide, or other statutory designation therefor.

Under some statutes, frequently enacted in order to provide a specific offense, other than manslaughter, for certain homicides caused by the operation of motor vehicles or to make criminal specified homicides caused thereby which prior thereto did not constitute a criminal offense, one who causes the death of a human being by the negligent or other specified operation of a motor vehicle is guilty of the crime of negligent homicide,³³ or of reckless homicide,³⁴ or involuntary homicide,³⁵ or of criminal negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle resulting in death,³⁶ or some other statutory designation for such an offense.³⁷ Such statutes and statutes relating to manslaughter have been held not to be in conflict with each other.³⁸ Although such offenses, sometimes by force of express statutory provision to that effect, have been held lesser offenses than the crime of manslaughter,³⁹ and included within a charge of manslaughter committed in the operation of a motor vehicle,⁴⁰ they are different from the offense of

Basis of rule

The principle is based on the theory that a man intends the natural consequences of his act and that he is aware, or ought to be aware, of what will result from the reckless or grossly careless operation of an automobile, which becomes a dangerous instrumentality under such circumstances, although he actually has no intention to kill—Largent v. Commonwealth, 97 S.W.2d 538, 265 Ky. 598—Morris v. Commonwealth, 73 S.W.2d 1, 255 Ky. 276—King v. Commonwealth, 70 S.W.2d 667, 253 Ky. 775.

Tex.—Young v. State, 47 S.W.2d 320, 120 Tex.Cr. 39.

Definiteness required

It is not necessary that statute be so definite that offending motorist may know with certainty just how negligent he may be in causing another's death before he becomes criminally liable, since motorist has no legal right to be negligent in any degree.—State ex rel Zent v. Yanny, 12 N.W.2d 45, 244 Wis. 342.

Apparent danger

In a prosecution for negligent homicide, it is unnecessary to view the situation from accused's standpoint in determining whether there was "apparent danger"—Vasquez v. State, 52 S.W.2d 1056, 121 Tex.Cr. 478.

Effect on manslaughter

Statutory provision, including crime of negligent homicide by operating vehicle in crime of manslaughter so committed, was held not to change common-law crime of manslaughter or to repeal or amend any statute defining manslaughter—People v. McMurchy, 228 N.W. 723, 249 Mich. 147.

Dual liability not created

A provision in a statute relating to negligent homicide, which specifically provided that provisions of penal code defining involuntary manslaughter should not apply to homicide caused by driving of any vehicle, was held to prevent dual liability for same conduct.—People v. Mitchell, 166 P.2d 10, 27 Cal.2d 678.

No longer manslaughter

Causing death by culpable negligence in operating a motor vehicle is no longer manslaughter—People v. Stovall, 15 N.Y.S.2d 498, 172 Misc. 469.

Murder

The statute penalizing criminal negligence in the operation of a vehicle resulting in death has been construed not to include cases of murder.—State v. Bolsinger, 21 N.W. 2d 480, 221 Minn. 154.

Conduct constituting the offense

Under some statutes the crime occurs where one operates or drives a motor vehicle in a reckless or culpably negligent manner, whereby a human being is killed.—People v. Gardner, 8 N.Y.S.2d 917, 255 App.Div. 683.

manslaughter or a grade thereof,⁴¹ and the lesser homicide offense does not include the greater crime of manslaughter.⁴²

The question whether accused is guilty of the offense is dependent on the facts and circumstances of the particular case.⁴³ Such crime can be committed only as specified in the statutes defining it, and according to some authority only by means of a motor vehicle.⁴⁴ Under some statutes, negligent homicide is of two kinds or degrees, one which happens in the performance of a lawful act and one which occurs in the performance of an unlawful act.⁴⁵ It has been held to arise where a person is killed as a result of the operation of a motor vehicle at an immoderate or unreasonable rate of speed.⁴⁶ In some jurisdictions a motorist who, by the willful and negligent use of his motor vehicle, injures and causes the death of another does not necessarily thereby come under statutes denouncing negligent homicide, but he may be guilty of some other form of criminal homicide.⁴⁷

(4) Assault with Intent to Murder or Kill

may arise from an assault on a human being with, or in the operation of, a motor vehicle.

The offense of assault with intent to murder or kill may arise from an assault on a human being with, or in the operation of, a motor vehicle.⁴⁸ The offense of assault with intent to murder does not arise in a case where, if death had ensued, accused could not have been convicted of murder.⁴⁹ Where the driver of a motor vehicle resisting a lawful arrest attempts to run down an officer with the car, his act constitutes an assault with intent to commit murder.⁵⁰ Mere culpable negligence does not show a depraved mind regardless of human life essential to a conviction of an assault that, if death had ensued, would have constituted murder in the second degree.⁵¹

c. Liability of Persons Not Operating Vehicle

One may be guilty of a criminal homicide who aids or abets another in the operation of a motor vehicle in such a manner as to cause the death of a human being.

eration in such a manner as to indicate a willful or wanton disregard for the safety of persons or property is not incorporated into a statute defining negligent homicide as the operation of a motor vehicle in a reckless manner or with disregard for the safety of others so as to make willful or wanton disregard for the safety of persons or property one of the elements of negligent homicide.—State v. Under a statute which imposes criminal liability on a person who operates or drives a motor vehicle in a specified manner, whereby a human being is killed, criminal liability is limited to the operator of the vehicle which causes the death of a human being.⁶¹ Under other statutes, it has been held that a motorist whose driving caused an accident between other vehicles, with a resultant death, may be criminally liable for the death, even though his own car did not come in contact with the others.⁶²

Guests in a motor vehicle who were not on a joint mission with the driver, had no control over him, were not negligent, and did not do or say anything to cause the accident, cannot be convicted as principals for murder or other criminal homicide for the death of a person caused thereby.⁶³

d. Violation of Law

- (1) In general
- (2) Speed of vehicle

(1) In General

Not every violation of law or unlawful act in the operation of a motor vehicle will render the operator criminally liable for a death caused thereby. The violation must be intentional, or negligent and careless, or in reckless disregard or heedless indifference to the rights and safety of others, or an act which is dangerous and likely to result in death or great bodily harm and in violation of a statute designed to prevent injury and protect human life, and a mere unintentional or inadvertent violation or law not accompanied by recklessness is insufficient.

Under the rule that one who causes the death of another through the agency or operation of a motor vehicle while engaged in the commission of an unlawful act may be guilty of some form of criminal homicide, such as manslaughter, as discussed supra subdivision b (2) of this section, or lesser or substituted grade of criminal homicide, as discussed supra subdivision b (3) of this section, it has been held that not every violation of law or unlawful act in the operation of a motor vehicle will render the operator criminally liable for a death caused thereby.⁶⁴ Such liability has been held not imposed for a death caused by an unintentional or inadvertent violation of law governing the operation of motor vehicles, not accompanied by recklessness and not under circumstances such that the act was likely to result in death or bodily harm,⁶⁵ or by a technical violation of law in the operation of the vehicle which was due to unforeseen circumstances and conditions beyond the control of accused and against his will and without negligence on his part.⁶⁶

In some jurisdictions a distinction is made between acts malum in se and acts malum prohibitum.⁶⁷ In such jurisdictions criminal liability is imposed for a death caused by the operation of a motor vehicle while the operator is engaged in an unlawful act malum in se,⁶⁸ but, if the act is malum prohibitum, criminal liability will be imposed for some, but not all, violations thereof resulting in death.⁶⁹ If the act is malum prohibitum, it has been held that the unlawful act must be done in such a manner as to constitute more than a mere thoughtless omission or slight deviation from the norm of prudent conduct and must be reckless or in marked disregard for the safety of others,⁷⁰ or the killing must be the natural or probable result of the unlawful act,⁷¹ in order for criminal liability to be imposed, although it is not essential to the existence of the offense that the unlawful act be one which has knowable and apparent potentialities for producing death.⁷² In other jurisdictions, however, criminal liability is imposed for a death caused by the operation of a motor vehicle while the operator is engaged in the commission of an unlawful act without regard to whether the unlawful act is malum prohibitum or malum in se.⁷³ Criminal liability, however, is imposed for the violation of a statute or law regulating the operation of motor vehicles resulting in death if the violation was intentional,⁷⁴ or negligent and careless,⁷⁵ or such as to disclose a reckless disregard of conse-

Character of violation required

Violation of penal automobile statute designed for protection of human life and limb is criminal negligence if intentionally, willfully, or wantonly committed, or inadvertently or unintentionally committed with recklessness amounting, at least, to gross negligence, or under circumstances from which probable death or injury to others might have been reasonably anticipated—Cain v. State, 190 SE 371, 55 Ga. App. 376.

Rule of the road

A mere violation of a rule of the road is not an unlawful or criminal act within the law of manslaughter, but in addition to such a violation there must be a wanton and reckless indifference to the safety of others.—State v. Kellison, 11 N.W.2d 371, 233 Iowa 1274.

Improper lights

A death caused by a motorist driving with only one headlight in violation of statute is not, alone, sufficient to constitute involuntary manslaughter, but to do so it must appear that the driver was operating his vehicle at the time in a careless, negligent, or unlawful manner.

Test

The test of criminal liability for violating highway statute by driving upon wrong side of road is whether driver does so consciously or under circumstances which would charge a reasonably prudent person with appreciation of the fact and the anticipation of consequences injurious or fatal to others—Weaver v. State, 206 SW.2d 293, 185 Tenn. 276—Trentham v. State, 206 SW.2d 291, 185 Tenn. 271—Potter v. State, 124 S.W.2d 232, 174 Tenn. 118.

Fla.—Austin v. State, 132 So. 491, 101 Fla. 990.

Provocation or emergency

The fact that the violation of a positive law or the commission of an act expressly prohibited is prima facie unlawful does not preclude accused from showing a provocation or emergency which produce such act, if such was the case—Bell v. Commonwealth, 195 SE 675, 170 Va. 597.

73. Involuntary manslaughter

Where the offense charged is involuntary manslaughter, it is immaterial whether the unlawfulness of the act is inherent in its very nature and purpose or arises only from the manner of performing an act which in its inception and aims is not unlawful—Commonwealth v. Aurick, 19 A 2d 920, 342 Pa. 282—Commonwealth v. Delicese, 38 A 2d 494, 155 Pa. Super. 120.

Negligent or reckless act

(1) Negligence sufficient to make an act unlawful within the rule is more than mere thoughtlessness or slight carelessness; it is reckless conduct or conduct evincing a marked disregard for the safety of others.—State v. Lingman, 91 P.2d 457, 97 Utah 180.

(2) It has been stated that reckless operation of a motor vehicle is quences or a heedless indifference to the rights and safety of others and reasonable foresight that injury would probably result,⁷⁶ or if the act is in itself dangerous and likely to result in death or great bodily harm,⁷⁷ and is in violation of a statute intended and designed to prevent injury and protect human life and safety.⁷⁸

Under the foregoing rules it has been held in various instances that merely driving on the wrong side of the street,⁷⁹ driving on the left side of the road at excessive speed,⁸⁰ passing an overtaken vehicle to the right,⁸¹ or driving without a license⁸² is not, of itself, sufficient to establish criminal liability for a homicide resulting therefrom. On the other hand, under the foregoing rules it has been held that a motorist may be guilty of a criminal homicide for a death occasioned by the operation of a motor vehicle in violation of regulations imposed by law,⁸³ such as the violation of laws pertaining to the operation of motor vehicles upon a public highway or street,⁸⁴ including violations an unlawful act which will sustain a charge of involuntary manslaughter for a death caused thereby—Commonwealth v. Holman, 50 A.2d 720, 160 1a Super. 211—Commonwealth v. Stosny, 31 A.2d 582, 152 Pa. Super. 236—Commonwealth v. Aurick, 10 A.2d 22, 138 Pa. Sup. r. 180—Commonwealth v. Hipple, 1a Quar. Sess., 57 Dauph. Co. 156—Commonwealth v. Amatucci, Pa. Quar. Sess., 29 Del. Co. 160.

(3) However, the recklessness of conduct must amount to unlawfulness of conduct and not merely approximate unlawfulness in order to sustain the charge.—Commonwealth v. Aurick, 19 A.2d 920, 342 Pa. 282.

Inference not conclusive

The inference of negligence arising from violation of statute by driving upon the wrong side of the road is not necessarily conclusive and may be rebutted by contradictory evidence, and by evidence explaining the conditions under which the alleged offense was committed.—State v. Brown, 32 S.E.2d 825, 205 S.C. 514.

Not per se violation

Driving motor vehicle upon left side of highway is not per se violation of law, but is so only when highway is not clear and unobstructed for fifty yards ahead.—Dunham v. State, 186 S.W.2d 820, 148 Tex. Cr. 329.

A motorist who turns to the left to pass a vehicle ahead must be reasonably alert that he shall not thereby seriously endanger a vehicle approaching in the opposite direction, since the latter has the right of way over him.—Henderson v. State, 25 So. 2d 133, 199 Miss. 629.

82. In Pennsylvania

(1) The killing of a person while operating a motor vehicle without an operator's license has been held insufficient, without other negligent or unlawful act, to convict the driver of involuntary manslaughter, on the ground that the driving without an operator's license was not the proximate cause of the death.—Commonwealth v. Williams, 1 A.2d 812, 133 Pa. Super. 104—Commonwealth v. Lowans, 21 Pa. Dist. & Co. 66, 39 Dauph. Co. 66, 82 Pittsb. Leg. J. 238, 48 York Leg. Rec. 49.

(2) It has been stated that the failure of one to procure a motor vehicle operator's license, without more, is not an offense.—Commonwealth v. Williams, supra.

(3) Other authority, however, has held that the death results from the unlawful operation of the vehicle, that the unlawful act is the driving of the automobile, not the failure to obtain a license, and, hence, the driver may be convicted of involuntary manslaughter.—Commonwealth v. Romig, 22 Pa. Dist. & Co. 341, 27 Berks Co. 41.

Distance maintained

It is a violation of law to drive in excess of the statutory speed limit

(2) Speed of Vehicle

A motorist may be guilty of a criminal homicide for a death occasioned by the operation of his vehicle at an excessive or unlawful speed.

Under the rules imposing criminal liability for a death caused while engaged in the commission of an unlawful act, it has been held that a motorist may be guilty of a criminal homicide, where a person is killed as a result of his operation of a motor vehicle at an excessive speed,⁹⁴ as where the death was caused by driving a motor vehicle in violation of a speed law⁹⁵ designed to prevent injury to the person,⁹⁶ or at a speed which, under the

for a distance of less than one quarter of a mile, even though, in order to sustain a conviction for violation of the speed limit, it is necessary that accused's speed be timed for not less than that distance.—Commonwealth v. Kurtz, 33 Pa.Dist. & Co. 661.

Anticipation of injury

One disobeying statute regulating speed of automobile has been held to have anticipated possibility of any injury caused thereby.—McGoldrick v. State, 21 S.W.2d 390, 159 Tenn. 667.

Culpable negligence

Excessive speed may constitute culpable negligence within the statute defining manslaughter in the second degree.—State v. Goldstone, 175 N.W. 892, 144 Minn. 405.

Habitual violation by other motorists is not a defense—Wilson v. State, 161 So. 744, 173 Miss. 372.

Wanton or reckless conduct

It is not necessary that motorist's driving should have been wanton or reckless.—People v. Flores, 187 P.2d 910, 83 Cal.App.2d 11.

Where excess above speed limit is willful and intentional, homicide caused thereby is manslaughter.—Wilson v. State, 161 So. 744, 173 Miss. 372.

Peace officer

Prohibition agent, killing pedestrian while pursuing criminal, was excepted from speed limitations, if he acted in good faith, and with care of ordinarily prudent person.—Lilly v. State of West Virginia, C.C.A.W. Va., 29 F.2d 61.

circumstances, made it an unlawful act.⁹⁷ However, the speed at which a motor vehicle was going has been held not of itself sufficient to impose criminal liability for a homicide resulting from the operation of the vehicle.⁹⁸ In some jurisdictions, it has been held that, in order that a homicide resulting from a violation of a speed law may constitute manslaughter, accused must have displayed a wanton and reckless disregard and indifference for the safety of other persons who might reasonably be expected to be injured thereby,⁹⁹ and, in others, that driving in excess of the speed limit merely through a failure to exercise due care, and not intentionally or recklessly, will not impose criminal liability for a death caused thereby, unless in the light of the attendant circumstances it was likely to result in death or bodily harm.¹ Where driving in excess of the speed limit just prior to the accident was the cause thereof, the mere fact that at the moment of impact the speed of the vehicle had been slowed to a rate below the speed limit will not be sufficient of itself to entitle accused to an acquittal.² Under an ordinance providing that a speed in excess of a specified rate shall be unlawful, justifying circumstances have been held to be immaterial.³

e. Intoxication

A death occasioned by the operation of a motor vehicle while the driver is under the influence of intoxicating liquor may constitute a criminal homicide.

A death occasioned by the operation of a motor vehicle while the driver is under the influence of intoxicating liquor has been held to be a criminal homicide,⁴ generally some form or grade of manslaughter,⁵ although the facts may be such as to

Speed limit not conclusive

(1) Fact that accused at time of collision was operating automobile within legal speed limit would not be conclusive on question whether speed was excessive.—People v. Von Eckartsberg, 23 P.2d 819, 133 Cal.App. 1

(2) Automobile must be operated at reasonable speed not endangering life irrespective of legal speed limit.—People v. McKee, 251 P. 675, 80 Cal.App. 200.

Regardless of negligence

The killing may amount to manslaughter in the second degree, regardless of whether the driving of the automobile was grossly careless, or grossly negligent.—Downey v. State, 4 So.2d 422, 30 Ala.App. 285, certiorari granted 4 So.2d 428, 241 Ala. 514.

Purpose of statute is to bring just punishment on those who are responsible for death of others because of mismanagement of automobiles due to intoxication.—Barrington v. State, 199 So. 320, 145 Fla. 61.

Construction

The statute must be read with respect to its manifest intent and spirit, and cannot be limited to the literal meaning of a single word, and must be construed as a whole and interpreted according to the sense in make the offense murder,⁶ and it has been held to be murder in jurisdictions where the act of driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated is a felony.⁷ The killing of a person may constitute criminal homicide where the driver, in addition to being intoxicated, is otherwise violating the law,⁸ and operation of a motor vehicle while intoxicated may be negligence sufficient to constitute the offense of manslaughter,⁹ or be sufficient to show a wanton and reckless disregard of human life.¹⁰ However, under some statutes, the driving of a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, although a misdemeanor and, hence, negligence per se,¹¹ is not per se culpable or criminal negligence which will cause the offense to be manslaughter;¹² nor does it, of itself, make out a prima facie case of manslaughter;¹³ and the fact that driving while intoxicated in itself is a statutory violation and a criminal offense is not determinative thereof.¹⁴ The mere fact that the driver of a motor vehicle which the words are employed, regard being had to the plain intention of the legislature.—Barrington v. State, supra.

Repeal of statute

Act dealing with traffic regulations, even though it denounced offense of driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated was held not expressly or by implication to repeal statute denouncing and prescribing punishment for manslaughter committed by one operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated.—*Calhoun v. Place of operation

Manslaughter may be committed under statute whether automobile is operated upon highways, streets, thoroughfares, or at some other place.—Patterson v. State, 175 So. 730, 128 Fla. 539.

What constitutes operation of vehicle

(1) Operation of vehicle is not limited to state of motion produced by mechanism of automobile, but includes at least ordinary stops upon the highway which are to be regarded as fairly incidental to its operation.—Barrington v. State, 199 So. 320, 145 Fla. 61.

(2) Operation of vehicle includes parking upon highway at night without lights.—Barrington v. State, supra.

Culpable negligence in the operation of the motor vehicle is not an element of the crime as it is defined in some of the statutes.—Graives v. State, 172 So. 716, 127 Fla. 182—Cannon v. State, 107 So 360, 91 Fla 214.

Wanton and reckless disregard of the safety of others is not required in order to constitute the offense under some statutes.—State v. Kellison, 11 N.W.2d 371, 233 Iowa 1274.

Intoxication provides element of negligence

Where the primary offense denounced by the statute is the operation of a motor vehicle by an intoxicated person, with the punishment to be meted out dependent on the injury resulting, the most severe being imposed where death results, the element of negligence is established by the intoxication of accused due to the voluntary use of intoxicants.—Roddenberry v. State, 11 So 2d 582, 152 Fla. 197, appeal dismissed Roddenberry v. State of Florida, 63 S.Ct. 266, 317 U.S. 600, 87 L.Ed. 490, rehearing denied 63 S.Ct. 440, 317 U.S. 713, 87 L.Ed. 568.

Facts considered on question of negligence has been drinking intoxicating liquor has been held insufficient to impose criminal liability on him for a death resulting from the operation of the vehicle.¹⁵ In order to impose such liability his drinking must have been to such an extent that at the time of the accident he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor or was intoxicated.¹⁶

§ 658. — Intent to Kill or Knowledge of Danger

In determining the guilt of a driver of a motor vehicle, accused of a criminal homicide, consideration should be given to the presumption that he knew the natural and necessary consequences of his driving, as well as to his right to assume that others would use due care for their own safety. Intent or malice is required in order that the homicide may constitute murder, and generally an intent to kill or wanton conduct, from which malice may be inferred, is required for voluntary manslaughter or manslaughter in the first degree, but ordinarily intent or malice is not required for involuntary manslaughter or negligent homicide.

One who drives a motor vehicle in an unlawful or negligent manner is presumed to know the natural and necessary consequences which may result therefrom,¹⁷ including the knowledge that several persons may be killed and injured in an accident resulting therefrom.¹⁸ The physical conditions existing at the time of the accident, which accused knew or ought to have known, should be considered in determining whether he was driving recklessly or otherwise improperly.¹⁹ Any assumption in which a driver has the right to indulge, such as that others will use due care for their own safety, is to be considered on the question of his guilt.²⁰ The question whether or not accused actually knew that he was violating the law at the time of the homicide is immaterial.²¹

Murder. Since intent or malice is a necessary element of murder, as considered in Homicide §§ 13-15, in order that the killing of a person by the operation of a motor vehicle may constitute murder there ordinarily must have been what is in law an intent to kill by such an operation,²² and consciousness of peril or probable peril to life therefrom.²³ Actual intent to kill deceased on the part of the operator of the motor vehicle has been held not to be required in order to constitute murder,²⁴ and, under some statutes, one may be guilty of murder without malice where he so operates a motor vehicle as to cause the death of another.²⁵ The necessary intent or malice may be implied or inferred.²⁶ However, a motor vehicle is not per se

16. Amount of liquor consumed held immaterial

Ohio.—Masoncup v. State, 189 N.E. 512, 47 Ohio App. 32.

When intoxication a factor

In order for the driver's intoxication to be a factor in manslaughter case involving culpable negligence, it must create abnormal mental and physical condition tending to deprive driver of clearness of intellect and control of himself which he would otherwise possess.—Cutshall v. State, 4 So.2d 289, 191 Miss. 764.

Effect on accused considered

Any mental and physical condition of accused due to the influence of intoxicating liquor may be considered on the issue of culpable negligence.—Cutshall v. State, supra.

Extent of intoxication required impaired is intoxicated.—Stevens v. People, 51 P.2d 1022, 97 Colo. 559.

Malice will be implied, so as to make the crime murder, where all the facts and circumstances show an abandoned and malignant heart; but not otherwise.—Huntsinger v. State, 36 S.E.2d 92, 200 Ga. 127.

Effect of statute

In statute defining "involuntary manslaughter," proviso that involuntary killing in commission of unlawful act naturally tending to destroy human being's life shall be deemed murder, will not be applied in prosecution for murder wherein state relies on implied malice, unless circumstances show accused's abandoned and malignant heart.—Huntsinger v. State, supra.

a dangerous instrumentality or deadly weapon so that in a prosecution for murder malice will be implied merely from its reckless or unlawful use.²⁷

Manslaughter. Under some statutes, in order that the operation of a motor vehicle causing a death may constitute voluntary manslaughter or manslaughter in the first degree there must be either a positive intent to kill or an intentional act from which, ordinarily, in the usual course of events death or great bodily harm may be a consequence,²⁸ and, if the latter is relied on, a positive or specific intent to kill is not necessary to the existence of the offense.²⁹ Whether or not there was an intent to kill, the offense is committed where a death results from a motorist driving recklessly in such a manner as to endanger human life,³⁰ or so as to evidence a wanton and reckless disregard of human life at the time and place and under the circumstances,³¹ or where accused intentionally drove against deceased.³²

It has been stated that malice or an intent to take life is not necessary in order that a death from the operation of a motor vehicle may constitute manslaughter,³³ or involuntary manslaughter,³⁴ or manslaughter in the second degree;³⁵ and some statutes, in defining what acts constitute the crime of manslaughter, contemplate an unintentional killing.³⁶ However, intent to do an unlawful or grossly negligent act, resulting in the unintentional death of another, has been held to be an element of the offense;³⁷ and, hence, the crime is committed, unless otherwise provided by statute, when a person is unintentionally killed by the driver's operation of his motor vehicle negligently or in violation of law,³⁸ and although at the time the driver did not

The recklessness of accused itself imports the essential criminal intent—Newcomb v. Commonwealth, 124 S. W.2d 486, 276 Ky. 362.

Knowledge required

Actual or probable damages to some person must have existed as matter of knowledge and present consciousness, or that which in law is the equivalent thereof, in order to constitute reckless and wanton negligence—Willis v. State, 197 So. 62, 29 Ala.App. 365, certiorari denied 197 So. 67, 240 Ala. 52—Curlette v. State, 142 So. 775, 25 Ala.App. 179.

Speed

Forty miles per hour is not per se reckless speed—Curlette v. State, supra.

Character of wanton or reckless conduct required

(1) Accused must have been guilty of such recklessness or wanton conduct as to imply the malice aforethought necessary to constitute murder at common law.—State ex rel. Shields v. Portman, 6 N.W.2d 713, 242 Wis. 5.

(2) Culpable wantonness, sufficient to authorize a conviction, exists when accused has knowledge that some person is likely to be in a position of danger and, with conscious disregard of such known danger, recklessly proceeds on a dangerous course which causes disaster, although he may not know whether any person is actually in danger—Rainey v. State, 17 So.2d 687, 245 Ala. 458.

Wanton misconduct held not shown from mere fact that:

(1) Accused was driving automobile on wrong side of road—Curlette v. State, 142 So. 775, 25 Ala.App. 179.

(2) Accused took three drinks of home brew four and one-half hours before driving—Curlette v. State, supra.

actually know that his act would result in a homicide.³⁹

Other homicides. Under various statutes an intent to kill is not an element of the offense of negligent homicide,⁴⁰ and it has been held not to depend on the presence of the element of willfulness or intention to violate the law.⁴¹ Under other statutes, in order that reckless driving may constitute the crime of criminal negligence in the operation of a vehicle resulting in death, accused must have known, or should have known, that his manner of driving the vehicle created an unreasonable risk of harm, but he need not have intended to cause harm.⁴² Intent has been held not a necessary element of the statutory crime of involuntary homicide.⁴³

Assault with intent to murder. A specific intent to kill is an essential element of the offense of assault with intent to kill or murder by striking another with a motor vehicle operated by accused.⁴⁴ A wanton or reckless state of mind may be the equivalent of a specific intent to kill.⁴⁵ Also, it has been held that the intent to do the prohibited act is sufficient where the injury resulted from the unlawful act,⁴⁶ or that the operation of the vehicle in a manner forbidden by law may take the place of and supply the unlawful intent.⁴⁷ However, criminal negligence will not, in every case, supply the intent to kill, and the mere fact that accused was violating the speed or traffic laws of the state or was under the influence of intoxicating liquor is not ipso facto sufficient therefor.⁴⁸

Intoxication or influence of drugs. It has been held that a driver of a motor vehicle is not guilty of murder who, at the time of the homicide, had been deprived of his reason and the capacity of knowing the wrongfulness of his acts by drugs given to him or prescribed for him by a physician to alleviate pain,⁴⁹ or who is so under the influence of intoxicating liquor as to be incapable of forming the necessary intent for murder.⁵⁰ However, voluntary drunkenness is no excuse for crime.⁵¹ It has been held that driving a motor vehicle at excessive speed while intoxicated is sufficient to sustain a conviction of murder in the second degree for a death caused thereby, even though the killing was not intentional,⁵² or that intent or malice sufficient to constitute murder may be implied where an intoxicated person drives in a reckless and wanton manner so as to endanger the lives of others.⁵³ The fact that at the time of the homicide the driver was so intoxicated as not to know that his driving was apt to cause injury to another is no defense to a charge of involuntary manslaughter.⁵⁴ The drunken condition of an owner or proprietor of a motor vehicle who permitted his vehicle to be driven in a reckless manner by a drunken companion has been held not to constitute a defense to a prosecution for the murder of one killed by the reckless operation of the vehicle.⁵⁵

Even though it might be considered a felonious killing if accused wrongfully ran his motor vehicle over deceased, although without malice or intention to kill, a verdict of manslaughter in the second degree will not be disturbed.—Gore v. State, 114 So. 791, 22 Ala.App. 136, certiorari denied Ex parte State ex rel. Attorney General, 114 So. 794, 217 Ala. 68.

§ 659. — Degree of Negligence

- a. In general
- b. Involuntary manslaughter
- c. Negligent homicide or similar statutory offense

a. In General

Although, under some statutes, ordinary negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle is sufficient to make the death of a human being caused thereby some form or grade of criminal homicide, generally some greater character or degree of negligence is required therefor.

Not every instance where a human being is killed by a motor vehicle driven by another under circumstances showing negligence constitutes a crime,⁵⁷ and a homicide may result from carelessness of such low degree or trivial character in the lawful operation of a motor vehicle as not to involve criminality.⁵⁸ Although, under some statutes, negligence, or ordinary negligence, in the operation of a motor vehicle is sufficient to support a charge of some form or grade of criminal homicide for a death caused thereby, and it is unnecessary to show gross negligence,⁵⁹ generally the negligence required is more than ordinary common-law negligence,⁶⁰ and is something more, or greater in degree, than the negligence necessary to impose civil liability.⁶¹ In the absence of statute providing otherwise, criminal liability does not arise for a death in the use or operation of a motor vehicle caused from slight negligence,⁶² or from mere carelessness or negligence,⁶³ where the negligent act causing the death was lawful,⁶⁴ or from

Drunken proprietor

Proprietor of motor vehicle may be convicted of murder in second degree where, while intoxicated although not irresponsible, he directed another intoxicated person to take charge of his car, whose negligent and unlawful operation caused wreck and killing of another—State v. mere negligence not amounting to a reckless, willful, and wanton disregard of consequences.⁶⁵

The character or degree of negligence required for criminal liability has been variously stated and is dependent on the grade of offense involved and the provisions of the controlling statutes. Accordingly, it has been variously stated that the negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle necessary and sufficient to impose criminal liability for a death resulting therefrom is negligence so great that the law imputes a criminal intent,⁶⁶ or such a wide departure from due care as to amount to gross and reckless operation of the motor vehicle,⁶⁷ or criminal or culpable negligence,⁶⁸ gross negligence,⁶⁹ or gross or culpable negligence,⁷⁰ or carelessness or recklessness,⁷¹ or operation of the vehicle in a reckless, wanton, and careless manner.⁷²

However, regardless of the particular character or degree of negligence stated to be necessary to impose criminal liability, the character of conduct required is generally such as manifests on the part of accused an indifference to, or disregard for, the consequences of his act or the life or safety of others or such as is likely to cause great bodily harm or death to another.⁷³

Under these rules the standard of conduct, by which criminal liability for a homicide resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle is measured, is not the highest degree of care.⁷⁴ It has been held to be the omission to do something which a reasonable and prudent person would do,⁷⁵ or the doing of something which such a person would not do under the circumstances surrounding the particular case,⁷⁶ or the want of usual and ordinary

Unfamiliar road

A motorist, who is unfamiliar with the road upon which he is driving in the nighttime, cannot with impunity take chances on mere appearances and drive ahead without regard for the possibility of causing death or injury to other persons upon the highway.—State v. Phelps, 110 P.2d 755, 153 Kan. 337.

82. Del.—State v. Elliott, 8 A.2d 873, 1 Terry 250.

Circumstances considered

The character of the highway before and at place of collision, the position of parked automobile with which motorist collided, and the conditions of visibility and speed at which motorist was driving are to be considered.—State v. Elliott, supra.

What constitutes proper control

"Control" means management or government, and the phrase "under proper control" as applied to the operation of an automobile upon a public highway means operation at such speed and with such attention to its mechanism and power as will enable the driver to stop it with a reasonable degree of quickness or within a reasonable distance, or to guide it safely by objects upon the highway, dependent on existing circumstances and likelihood of danger to others upon the highway.—State v. Elliott, supra.

Care demanded by circumstances

One operating an automobile upon a public highway must use that degree of care and caution which the particular circumstances demand in order that others lawfully upon the highway may not be injured or killed.—State v. Elliott, 8 A.2d 873, 1 Terry, Del., 250.

Care to avoid collision

Driver of vehicle passing another must exercise proper care to avoid collision with oncoming vehicle, whether vehicle passed is moving or at rest.—Goodman v. Commonwealth, 151 S.E. 168, 153 Va. 943.

Circumstances considered

The character of the roadway, the brightness of the night, the speed at which he was driving, and the position of the parked vehicle the motorist hit are to be considered.—State v. Elliott, 8 A.2d 873, 1 Terry, Del., 250.

Duty to maintain lookout

(1) There is a duty on the part of automobile driver to keep a lookout for pedestrians upon crosswalks, even though such driver may have a green light at the intersection.—State v. Bushy, 131 P.2d 510, 102 Utah 416, 144 A.L.R. 1468.

(2) Inability of motorist to see because of lights of automobile approaching from opposite direction enlarge his obligation to be cautious and to anticipate presence of a pedestrian in crosswalk.—People v. Lett, 177 P.2d 47, 77 Cal.App.2d 917.

(3) Lack of knowledge of motorist blinded by lights of approaching vehicle, or presence of pedestrian in public crosswalk, does not justify failure to keep proper lookout for pedestrian, or to give warning.—People v. Lett, supra.

Failure to see

(1) Motorist who did not see his victim until the instant of impact, or not at all, was held guilty of gross negligence or of an entire indifference to those using the street or highway simultaneously with him.—People v. Flores, 187 P.2d 910, 83 Cal. App.2d 11.

(2) Failure to see that which is plainly visible is a disregard for duty.—State v. Elliott, 8 A.2d 873, 1 Terry, Del., 250.

Unlawful act held not shown

The failure of motorist who had right of way to look to his left after reaching a point close to the intersection was held not of itself an unlawful act sufficient to sustain a manslaughter charge.—Commonwealth v. Ushka, 198 A. 465, 130 Pa.Super. 606.

b. Involuntary Manslaughter

The negligence necessary and sufficient to convict a motorist of involuntary manslaughter, or manslaughter of some grade equivalent thereto, is generally negligence greater than ordinary negligence or the negligence sufficient to support a civil action for damages, and is negligence which is gross, culpable, or criminal, or equivalent thereto, and such as evinces a disregard for the life or safety of others.

Where negligence is relied on to convict a motorist of involuntary manslaughter, or manslaughter of a grade equivalent thereto, for a death resulting from the operation of his motor vehicle, it has generally been held that the negligence required is more than ordinary negligence or the lack of ordinary care,⁸⁶ or more than the negligence sufficient to support a civil action for damages,⁸⁷ although, under some circumstances, a failure to exercise ordinary care has been held to constitute gross negligence sufficient to render the crime manslaughter.⁸⁸ Gross⁸⁹ or culpable,⁹⁰ or criminal,⁹¹

Effect of other statute

"Gross negligence," as defined in the so-called guest passenger act, where it is used as synonymous with

"wanton and willful misconduct," has no application in a case of involuntary manslaughter arising when an unlawful act is committed.—People v. Wardell, 289 N.W. 328, 291 Mich. 276

Gross negligence held shown

Wis.—State v. Whatley, 245 N.W. 93, 210 Wis. 157, 99 A.L.R. 749.

What constitutes

Gross negligence cannot rest on inadvertence; there must be something in the conduct of the motorist which shows wantonness, recklessness, or willfulness.—Russard v. State, 288 N.W. 187, 233 Wis. 11—State v. Whatley, 245 N.W. 93, 210 Wis. 157, 99 A.L.R. 749.

Culpable negligence has been held similar to that conduct denounced by automobile guest statute as "gross negligence" and "willful and wanton misconduct."—State v. Bates, 271 N.W. 765, 65 S.D. 105.

Greater than gross

Under a statute which makes a killing through culpable negligence manslaughter, the term "culpable negligence" has been construed to mean a negligence of a higher degree than that which in civil cases is held to be gross negligence, and must be a negligence of a degree so gross as to be tantamount to a wanton disregard of, or utter indifference to, the safety of human life.—Smith v. State, 20 So.2d 701, 197 Miss. 802, 161 A.L.R. 1.

In order to constitute a killing through culpable negligence it must be shown that a homicide was not improbable under all the facts existing at the time.—Smith v. State, supra.

Fast driving

Culpable negligence was not shown where a driver who was driving somewhat faster than usual lost control of automobile while attempting a left turn, and, in order to avoid collision with another automobile, Cal.—People v. Hurley, 56 P.2d 978, 13 Cal.App.2d 208.

What constitutes

(1) "Criminal negligence" has been defined as the reckless disregard for consequences or a needless indifference to the rights and safety of others with a reasonable foresight that injury would probably result.

Ark.—Phillips v. State, 161 S.W.2d 747, 204 Ark. 205.

though it need not be such as exhibits a reckless, wanton, and wicked disregard of the safety of others.⁴ Under a statute defining involuntary manslaughter as the involuntary killing of another in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, without due caution and circumspection, the act must be one which might produce death, but the negligence need not be wanton or reckless.⁵

c. Negligent Homicide or Similar Statutory Offense

Under some statutes the offense of negligent homicide or a similar offense may arise from a death caused by ordinary negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle, but under other statutes negligence of a higher degree or character is required for the offense.

Under some statutes one may be guilty of negligent homicide who causes a homicide by ordinary negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle,⁶

In California

(1) Ordinary negligence was held sufficient for the commission of the offense of negligent homicide when the statute creating the offense defined it as a "death caused by driving in a negligent manner" or in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony.—People v. Pociask, 96 P.2d 788, 14 Cal.2d 679—People v. Warner, 80 P.2d 737, 27 Cal. App.2d 190.

(2) Under the amendment of 1941 which redefined the offense as a death caused by driving "with reckless disregard for, or willful indifference to, the safety of others", something more than ordinary negligence, but less than the conventional intentional tort, was required in order to sustain a conviction.—People v. Young, 129 P.2d 353, 20 Cal.2d 832—Ex parte Whitlatch, 140 P.2d 457, 60 Cal.App.2d 189—People v. Murray, 136 P.2d 389, 58 Cal.App.2d 239.

(3) The amendment, which redefined the offense of negligent homicide, should be interpreted in accordance with definitions given by courts to similar terms, if such definitions may reasonably be said to fit the particular words used.—Ex parte Whitlatch, supra.

(4) "Reckless disregard of the safety of others," within statute defining negligent homicide, is doing an act while recklessly ignoring the safety of others, and is equivalent to the intentional doing of an act with a wanton and reckless disregard of its possible result.—*People v. that is, by more than slight and less than gross negligence;⁷ and in order to establish the offense it is not necessary to show negligence of such character as to evince a criminal intent⁸ or gross negligence.⁹ Under other statutes the offense of criminal negligence resulting in death arises where a death is caused by the operation of a motor vehicle in a reckless or grossly negligent manner,¹⁰ or in a reckless or culpably negligent manner,¹¹ or the offense of negligent homicide arises where the death is caused by operating the vehicle in a careless, reckless, or negligent manner constituting or amounting to a high degree of negligence.¹² Under such statutes, the negligence required is not mere ordinary negligence such as will impose civil liability, but negligence of an aggravated character,¹³ or gross or criminal negligence such as amounts to a willful intent to do injury or a wanton and reckless disregard for the rights and safety of others.¹⁴

§ 660. — Cause of Death

In order to convict an accused of a charge of a criminal homicide through the agency of a motor vehicle, the death of the decedent must have been proximately caused through the agency of such vehicle and by the acts of the accused which are charged as criminal.

In order for an accused to be guilty of a criminal homicide for the death of a human being resulting from his use or operation of a motor vehicle, the acts of accused which are charged as criminal must have proximately caused the death of the deceased,¹⁵ and it must not have been the result

(5) "Willful indifference to the safety of others," as used in statute, is an intentional lack of regard concerning safety of others, or an intentional doing of something with knowledge that serious injury is a probable result.—People v. Young, supra—People v. Gomez, supra—People v. Murray, supra—People v. Montes, supra.

(6) The driving with a reckless disregard or willful indifference to the safety of others required to constitute the offense has been held to be the same as "willful misconduct," which implies at least the intention of doing an act either with knowledge that serious injury is a probable result or the intention of doing an act with a wanton and reckless disregard of its probable result.—People v. Freeman, 142 P.2d 435, 61 Cal.App.2d 110.

Recklessness

(1) "Reckless" means a willful or wanton disregard for the safety of persons or property involving intentional conduct but not intentional harm as a result thereof.—State v. Homme, 32 N.W.2d 151, 226 Minn. 83.

(2) If death of pedestrian was due to motorist's intentional disregard for pedestrian's safety, death was

Panic

Criminal negligence within the statute is not shown by the fact that a driver when confronted with an emergency becomes panicky and loses control over his vehicle and thus causes the death of another.—People v. Brucato, 32 N.Y.S.2d 689.

Character of negligence required

(1) Under some statutes the negligence required is negligence representing indifference to a legal duty, or conduct not only creating unreasonable risk of bodily harm to another, but also involving high degree of probability that substantial harm will result to another, but it is something less than willful and wanton conduct, which is the virtual equivalent of intentional wrong.—State ex rel. Zent v. Yanny, 12 N.W.2d 45, 214 Wis. 342.

(2) Under other statutes the negligence required is negligence indicating such a reckless and wanton attitude as evinces a disregard for the safety of life and limb and is almost tantamount to a willfulness to do harm.—People v. Brucato, 32 N.Y.S.2d 689—People v. Chalupka, 32 N.Y.S.2d 688.

Decedent's own negligence causing death see infra § 663.

Causal relationship required

Under some statutes, in order to impose criminal liability, there must be a direct causal relationship between the death, the car which of an independent and intervening cause in which accused did not participate.¹⁶ An operator of a motor vehicle who injures another by negligence or unlawful conduct is responsible when death results from blood poisoning caused by dirt forced into the wounds at the time of the accident,¹⁷ unless the medical treatment of the injured person was so grossly erroneous or unskillful as to have been an intervening cause of death;¹⁸ and a driver whose operation of his motor vehicle causes injury to one who has an alcoholic brain, so that delirium tremens follows and death results, is criminally liable.¹⁹ Also accused is not entitled to be acquitted as a matter of law where the death results from shock, fright, fear, or terror and not from physical injuries inflicted by the accident.²⁰

Intoxication. In some jurisdictions it has been held that, in order for criminal liability to arise for a homicide occurring while accused was driving in an intoxicated condition or under the influence of intoxicating liquor, there must be a causal connection between the intoxication and the death of deceased,²¹ and that criminal liability will not be imposed on the ground of driving while intoxicated if accused was operating his vehicle correctly and as a man should who was not under the influence of intoxicating liquor, so that his intoxicated condition did not bring about or contribute to the death of the deceased.²² On the other hand, it has been held in other jurisdictions that the mere act of driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor makes the operation of the vehicle so unlawful that a death from its operation imposes criminal liability without regard to whether or not the driver's intoxication was the cause of the death or contributed thereto.²³ In still other jurisdictions it has been held that driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated is malum in se and in itself imposes criminal liability for a death resulting therefrom, but that driving while merely under the influence of liquor is only malum prohibitum and a homicide resulting therefrom may be excusable on the ground of misadventure if the violation of the statute in no way contributed to the homicide.²⁴

§ 661. — Failure to Render Assistance to Injured Person

Failure to comply with a statutory duty to render assistance to a person injured in a motor vehicle accident is no ingredient of the homicide where assistance would not have prevented his death.

The violation of a statute requiring a driver of a motor vehicle who has injured another to give him assistance is no ingredient or element of manslaughter, where the victim was so injured that caused the death, and the reckless and culpably negligent operation of the car which caused the death—People v. Lemieux, 27 N.Y.S.2d 235, 176 Misc. 305.

Act of owner

In order for the proprietor of a motor vehicle driven by another to be liable for a homicide caused by the vehicle on the ground that he permitted it to be driven at an excessive rate of speed, such excessive rate of speed must have been the proximate cause of the accident—State v. Lewis, 174 S.E. 483, 115 W.Va. 1.

Permit to move building

Failure of accused to have a permit to transport building along county road was held not to contribute to death of motorist who collided with the building because it was not protected by flares—State v. Ramser, 136 P.2d 1013, 17 Wash.2d 581.

Policy of law

It is immaterial whether or not the intoxication of the driver was the cause of the death. The policy of the law forbids an investigation of probable consequences when the driver of an automobile under the influence of an intoxicant kills another person on a public highway. There are many things a sober man, in the exercise of due care, would do to avoid such a result which would be entirely beyond an intoxicated driver. Fatalities are too numerous and conditions too serious to permit speculative inquiries in such a case.—Keller v. State, supra.

even if he had been assisted, death could not have been prevented.²⁵

§ 662. — Unavoidable Accident

There is no criminal liability for a death resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle where it is due to unavoidable accident or misadventure.

There is no criminal liability for a death resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle where it is due to unavoidable accident or misadventure,²⁶ or for an accidental, unintentional killing by a motorist, even though at the time of the killing he is engaged in an unlawful act which does not contribute to it.²⁷ However, a motorist who jeopardizes the lives and safety of others cannot, under the plea of accident, escape criminal liability for a homicide involuntarily resulting from his reckless or careless act or conduct.²⁸ A death by accident and mistake caused by a motor vehicle operated in such a manner and under such circumstances that in its operation the motorist is not prosecuting a lawful object in a lawful manner is not excusable under a statute excusing a death caused by one in the prosecution of a lawful object by lawful means where it happens by accident or misfortune.²⁹ One who drives his motor vehicle negligently or unlawfully and thereby causes the death of another is criminally responsible, even though the particular accident or the death of the particular person was unavoidable in the sense that the driver, at the time the danger became imminent or he discovered it, used every possible precaution to prevent death or injury to him.³⁰ The mere fact that the driver had his car under control is immaterial where he should have avoided the accident and failed to do so.³¹

§ 663. — Negligence of Decedent or Third Person

The negligence of the deceased or of a third person is not a defense to a prosecution for a homicide resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle, although it may be considered on the issue of whether the accused was criminally negligent or whether his conduct was the proximate cause of the homicide.

Contributory negligence of the deceased is not a defense to a prosecution for a homicide resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle³² and does not excuse an act of negligence or malfeasance on

Death held result of misadventure

Where automobile passing parked truck was struck by another car and knocked into truck, and protruding rod killed passenger, his death was the result of misadventure due to an independent and intervening cause.—Goodman v. Commonwealth, 151 S.E. 168, 153 Va. 943.

the part of the driver which proximately causes the death.³³ However, a homicide due solely to the negligence or fault of decedent imposes no criminal liability on the driver of a motor vehicle which strikes and kills him.³⁴ Hence the conduct of deceased is a circumstance to be considered in determining the guilt of accused.³⁵ It may be considered in order to determine whether accused was in fact negligent in the operation of the motor vehicle,³⁶ and on the degree of culpability or guilt of accused,³⁷ and whether his acts were the proximate cause of the death,³⁸ or whether it resulted from an unavoidable accident.³⁹ Also it is not a defense that causes other than the negligence or unlawful act of accused in the operation of his vehicle were contributing or concurring causes to the death of deceased.⁴⁰

Malice

(1) In order to allege implied malice, indictment must allege that accused acted so recklessly that law would imply actual intent to kill.—Wright v. State, 141 S.E. 903, 166 Ga. 1.

(2) Indictment alleging that accused's unlawful operation of automobile naturally tended to destroy life was insufficient to imply malice.—Wright v. State, supra.

Operation on public highway or street

Where the offense may be committed by operating a motor vehicle, whether on the highways, streets, or thoroughfares, or at some other place, it is unnecessary to allege that the vehicle was being operated on a highway, street, or thoroughfare.—Roddenberry v. State, 11 So.2d 582, 152 Fla. 197, appeal dismissed Roddenberry v. State of Florida, 63 S.Ct. 266, 317 U.S. 600, 87 L.Ed. 490, rehearing denied 63 S.Ct. 440, 317 U.S. 713, 87 L.Ed. 568.—Patterson v. State, 175 So. 730, 128 Fla. 539.

Weapon likely to produce death

Indictment for assault with intent to murder by operation of automobile while under influence of liquor need not allege assault was made with weapon likely to produce death.—Wright v. State, 148 S.E. 731, 168 Ga. 690, conformed to 149 S.E. 153, 40 Ga.App. 118.

clusion is not sufficient.⁴⁵ The prosecution has been required to allege everything it must prove,⁴⁶ and it has been held that the act or conduct of accused which caused the death of the deceased must be described and set out in the pleadings.⁴⁷ However, the pleadings need not allege all the facts and circumstances constituting the offense,⁴⁸ and matters which are not elements of the offense charged need not be alleged.⁴⁹

In some jurisdictions it is sufficient to charge the offense in the statutory language,⁵⁰ provided the statute is fully descriptive of the offense and sets forth the elements thereof;⁵¹ and it has been considered to be the better practice to follow the statutory language.⁵² It is not always sufficient, however, nor is it indispensable, to follow the language of the statute,⁵³ and pleadings have been held sufficient which charge the offense substantially in the language of the statute⁵⁴ or in language equivalent thereto.⁵⁵ In jurisdictions where a statutory form is provided for charging the offense, it is sufficient to charge the offense in such form.⁵⁶

In some jurisdictions general allegations that decedent was killed by accused in operating his motor vehicle unlawfully, feloniously, wantonly, recklessly, or with culpable negligence, without giving the details thereof, have been held sufficient,⁵⁷ although on a proper showing accused may be entitled to a bill of particulars.⁵⁸ In other jurisdictions, however, it has been held that such an indictment or information is insufficient where it contains no allegation of specific facts showing negligence or recklessness,⁵⁹ as distinguished from conclusions of fact or law;⁶⁰ but if it proceeds to set out the acts constituting the reckless or unlawful driving it is sufficient.⁶¹ The fact that the homicide charged is alleged to have been committed by culpable negligence does not require that the provisions of statutes regulating the operation of motor vehicles must be alleged.⁶² An allegation of a willful and unlawful violation of a statute governing the operation of motor vehicles has been held to constitute an allegation of negligent operation of the motor vehicle.⁶³

Different modes or means. Where the offense charged may be committed in one or more of several different ways it may be charged in the alternative,⁶⁴ and, where the homicide is charged to have been committed in different ways, if any one of the charges is good the pleading is sufficient to charge the crime.⁶⁵

Unlawful act. Where a pleading charges a homicide by accused in the commission of an unlawful act it must allege the unlawful act.⁶⁶ In such case it has been held sufficient to charge the unlawful act with sufficient particularity to identify it.⁶⁷ It has been held necessary, however, to allege such facts as will show that the act was unlawful, and that merely to allege the act and characterize it as unlawful is insufficient;⁶⁸ and also a pleading

Pleadings held not defective

Indictment which alleges that accused unlawfully, willfully, and feloniously made an assault with a motor vehicle has been held not defective for failure to allege commission of an unlawful act.—People v. Rewland, 167 N.E. 10, 335 Ill. 432.

68. Tex.—Worley v. State, 231 S.W. 391, 89 Tex.Cr. 393.

(1) It has been held insufficient merely to allege that accused unlawfully drove and operated his vehicle on the left side of the highway, since driving on the left side of the highway is not unlawful per se.—Morgan v. State, 120 S.W.2d 1063, 135 Tex.Cr. 402.

(2) The pleadings must contain allegations sufficient to show that it was practicable to have driven on the right side, "practicable" meaning usable or passable.—Morgan v. State, supra.

charging an unlawful act is insufficient when it fails to include the element of apparent danger, where a statute makes apparent danger of causing the death of deceased or of some person an essential of the offense.⁶⁹

Proximate cause. Ordinarily the indictment, information, or affidavit should allege that the death was proximately caused by the acts described.⁷⁰

Description of vehicle. The pleadings need not describe the particular character or kind of motor vehicle with which the killing was accomplished.⁷¹

Time. An indictment which in one count gives the date of the crime as the date of the accident and in another count as the date of the death of the injured person is not objectionable.⁷²

Joint conduct of accused and another. Where the conduct of accused and another or others in the handling of a motor vehicle is such as to make them equally guilty of the offense charged, they may be charged jointly with the offense without pleading any facts tending to show the alleged joint operation of the vehicle or the alleged act or acts of negligence relied on as to each of the persons accused.⁷³

Designation of crime or degree. An information or indictment reciting all the elements of manslaughter in a particular statutory degree will support a conviction thereof, although the degree of the crime is not specified.⁷⁴

Charge of manslaughter alone. Where the facts and circumstances justify it, manslaughter alone may be charged, as considered in Homicide § 163, and an information or indictment therefor must allege that accused was in the commission of some unlawful act, or was negligent in doing some act lawful in itself, or negligently omitted to perform a legal duty, and that death resulted therefrom.⁷⁵

Distinct and included offenses. It has been held that an indictment for manslaughter is sufficient to support a conviction of assault,⁷⁶ that a charge of manslaughter in the first degree is sufficient to support a conviction of manslaughter in the second degree,⁷⁷ and that, where a statute provides that a charge for murder includes all the lesser degrees of culpable homicide, such a charge carries with it a charge of negligent homicide.⁷⁸ Where, however, a lesser homicide has elements other than, and different from, those alleged in the charging of a particular homicide, the lesser is not included in the charge of the greater.⁷⁹ An indictment charging commission of a homicide in the performance of an unlawful act, which constitutes manslaughter in the second degree under the statute, is not sufficient to support a conviction for manslaughter in the first degree, which consists in a homicide committed in the performance of a lawful act negligently done, where the two crimes are distinct and differently punishable.⁸⁰ Also the offense of manslaughter is not included in a charge of the lesser offense of involuntary homicide.⁸¹

Distinct penal offenses not included within the homicide charged are not charged as offenses by

"Proximate"

Where the affidavit in a prosecution for negligent homicide alleges that the acts of reckless misconduct specified caused the death of decedent it need not characterize accused's reckless misconduct as "proximate", notwithstanding such misconduct must be the proximate cause of the homicide.—Turrell v. State, 51 N.E.2d 359, 221 Ind. 662.

Impossible act

An information charging that two accused jointly committed manslaughter through operation of automobile was not quashable for charging impossible act, where complaining accused was in physical control of automobile, since other accused might be jointly responsible for automobile's operation.—Peterson v. the fact that the acts or conduct of accused alleged to have caused the death of the deceased are in themselves distinct penal offenses. Hence, an indictment for murder reciting that accused made an assault on decedent with his motor vehicle, and ran against and struck him, and caused his death, is not objectionable as charging several distinct offenses,⁸² nor is an indictment alleging a homicide as the result of accused's driving while intoxicated and at excessive speed, although each of such acts constitutes a misdemeanor.⁸³

Grade of offense for which accused may be indicted. Where a motorist's conduct in the operation of a motor vehicle resulting in the death of another includes all the elements of both a lesser and a greater offense, he may be indicted for either the greater or the lesser offense.⁸⁴

§ 665. — Issues, Proof, and Variance

In a prosecution for a homicide resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle, the state must prove the essential elements of the offense charge and the evidence must be confined to the issues raised by the pleadings. A material variance between the allegations of the pleadings and the proof may be fatal to a conviction, but an immaterial variance will be disregarded.

In accordance with the rules governing the issues, proof, and variance in prosecutions for homicide generally, considered in Homicide §§ 175-184, which apply in prosecutions for a homicide caused by the operation of a motor vehicle,⁸⁵ the essential elements of the offense charged must be proved.⁸⁶ Proof is required of the corpus delicti,⁸⁷ that the accident or collision was the cause of the death of deceased,⁸⁸ and, where accused is prosecuted as a principal, of his identity as the driver of the motor vehicle which caused the death of deceased.⁸⁹ Where it constitutes an essential element of the offense charged, it is necessary in order to sustain a conviction that there be proof of negligence of the requisite character.⁹⁰

The evidence must be confined to the issues raised by the pleadings;⁹¹ but it is not necessary for the pleadings to allege the particular kind or character of evidence on which the state intends to rely to prove a particular issue in order for such evidence to be admissible thereon.⁹² The proof

84. Ga.—Collins v. State, 18 S.E.2d 24, 66 Ga.App.2d 326.

85. Defenses

In prosecution for negligent homicide by automobile, it was not incumbent on accused to plead insanity in order for him to prove that epilepsy caused him to be unconscious at the time of the accident.—People v. Freeman, 142 P.2d 435, 61 Cal.App.2d 110.

86. Proof required

(1) Under information charging negligent homicide, it was only necessary to prove, other than jurisdictional facts as to time and place, that accused was driving a motor vehicle negligently and that such driving resulted in death of person therein named.—People v. Warner, 80 P.2d 737, 27 Cal.App.2d 190.

(2) To sustain verdict of guilty of manslaughter the proof must disclose that accused knew of the danger of collision and recklessly, negligently, or wantonly ran down and collided with deceased without using such means as were reasonable and at his command to prevent the accident.—People v. Crego, 70 N.E.2d 578, 395 Ill. 451.

(3) In a prosecution for manslaughter it is not necessary to prove that the killing was willfully done.—Smith v. State, 20 So.2d 701, 197 Miss. 802, 161 A.L.R. 1.

Culpable negligence

Fla.—Pitts v. State, 182 So. 234, 132 Fla. 812.

Number of acts of negligence

Whether accused was guilty of several cumulative acts of negligence bearing a causal relation to injury inflicted is material on the question of his gross and culpable negligence.—Bell v. Commonwealth, 195 S.E. 675, 170 Va. 597.

In order to establish culpable or criminal negligence, it is not necessary to prove that accused intentionally, knowingly, and recklessly drove his vehicle against deceased.—People v. Przybyl, 6 N.E.2d 848, 365 Ill. 516.

91. Evidence applicable to different counts

Any evidence which tends to prove the charge as laid in a particular count of the indictment may be considered thereon, regardless of whether or not other counts contain similar charges.—People v. Jeffers, 25 N.E.2d 35, 372 Ill. 590, certiorari denied Jeffers v. People of State of Illinois, 60 S.Ct. 1081, 310 U.S. 638, 84 L.Ed. 1407.

Count not submitted

Evidence of accused's intoxication under a count not submitted to the jury was held admissible where the state in the development of the case proceeded on all the counts alleged.—Wallace v. State, 170 S.W.2d 762, 145 Tex.Cr. 625.

92. La.—State v. Vinzant, 7 So.2d 917, 200 La. 301.

Flight from scene of accident

On manslaughter charge, evidence of flight from the scene of the accident is admissible, even though it is not specifically alleged.—People v. Pierce, 15 N.E.2d 845, 369 Ill. 172.

Proof under particular issues

(1) Evidence of accused's intoxication was admissible without an averment thereof, in prosecution of motorist under negligent homicide statute.—People v. Randall, 293 N.W. 725, 294 Mich. 478.

(2) Evidence of driving automobile on wrong side of road was admissible where the pleadings alleged driving in an unlawful, careless, and negligent manner.—Crawford v. State, 216 N.W. 294, 116 Neb. 128.

(3) Evidence that there was a stop sign at intersection was admissible on issue of speed and reckless driving, even though there was no allegation in the pleadings that accused ran through it.—Millum v. State, 195 S.W.2d 134, 149 Tex.Cr. 409.

(4) Evidence as to whether accused had any liquor with him at

must conform to the pleadings as to material matters.⁹³ It must correspond with the allegations as to the manner, means, and character of acts and conduct of accused by which the homicide was committed;⁹⁴ and proof of acts of accused other than, or different from, those alleged to have caused the death of deceased will not sustain the charge,⁹⁵ even though they may be similar to the acts charged.⁹⁶ Substantial correspondence between the charge and proof is sufficient,⁹⁷ and the fact that particular acts are alleged as the cause of the death does not preclude the state from relying on other acts within the scope of the pleadings.⁹⁸ Where several acts are alleged as the cause of the death of deceased, proof of any one act or combination of acts alleged is sufficient.⁹⁹

A driver of a motor vehicle charged with manslaughter committed while in the performance of an unlawful act may be convicted on proof of negligence in the killing, regardless of the fact that the statute or ordinance relied on is invalid, in the absence of any statutory distinction between manslaughter as committed in the performance of an unlawful act and in the performance of a lawful act in an unlawful manner;¹ but where by statute two degrees of manslaughter are created, and separate punishments provided, dependent on the manner of commission, one charged with the commission of a homicide in the performance of an unlawful act cannot be convicted of a homicide committed in the performance of a lawful act negligently done.² However, the mere fact that a particular act is a misdemeanor and punishable as such does not prevent its being the basis of a prosecution for manslaughter.³

Place of death. The failure of the indictment, information, or affidavit to state the place of death has been held not to preclude the introduction of evidence thereof.⁴

§ 666. — Evidence

- a. In general
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. In General

On the trial of one charged with criminal homicide through the agency of a motor vehicle, the burden of proof is on the prosecution to establish beyond a reasonable doubt all the essential elements of the crime charged and the guilt of the accused.

In conformity with the general rules of evidence governing the burden of proof in prosecutions for homicide generally, considered in Homicide § 185, on the trial of one charged with criminal homicide through the agency of a motor vehicle the burden of proof is on the prosecution to establish beyond a reasonable doubt all the essential elements of the crime charged⁵ and, likewise, to establish beyond time of the accident and that his motor vehicle had only one headlight burning was admissible on the issue of gross carelessness and recklessness—State v. Vinzant, 7 So.2d 917, 200 La. 301.

93. Mich.—People v. Harrigan, 187 N.W. 306, 218 Mich. 235. 42 C.J. p 1359 note 12.

Fatal variance held not shown
Cal.—People v. Pryor, 61 P.2d 773, 17 Cal.App.2d 147.

Variance held immaterial

(1) Variance between indictment which described the vehicle in which deceased was riding as an automobile and the proof which established that it was an automobile turned into a truck.—People v. Rewland, 167 N.E. 10, 335 Ill. 432.

(2) Other variances held immaterial see 42 C.J. p 1359 note 12 [b].

94. Del.—Dean v. State, 125 A. 478, 2 W.W.Harr. 469.

Information held sufficient to allow proof as to how automobile was operated and to permit the establishment of facts under which motorist might be shown guilty of one or more of the acts or omissions which are the elements of the offense of manslaughter.

ter.—People v. Wilson, 177 P.2d 567, 78 Cal.App.2d 108.

95. Ind.—Shelton v. State, 199 N.E. 148, 209 Ind. 534.

Acts included within scope of those charged

Indictment charging manslaughter covered driving of automobile with willful and reckless disregard for life and limb of others as well as driving at unlawful rate of speed.—Minardo v. State, 183 NE 548, 204 Ind. 422.

96. Ind.—Shelton v. State, 199 N.E. 148, 209 Ind. 534.

97. Del.—Dean v. State, 125 A. 478, 2 W.W.Harr. 469.

Test of variance

Whether a variation exists between proof and allegations as to manner and means of death depends entirely on whether instrument used to cause death and manner thereof are substantially of the same nature and character as alleged in indictment.—Dean v. State, supra.

98. Particular act as negligence

The fact that particular acts are alleged as constituting the culpable negligence essential to the offense does not preclude the state from relying on other acts of negligence, where the indictment also charged that accused by his careless culpable negligence in handling, operating, and driving of automobile, caused the accident.—Bannerman v. State, 170 So. 127, 125 Fla. 459.

2. Tex.—Hampton v. State, 244 S.W. 525, 92 Tex.Cr. 441.

3. Neb.—Crawford v. State, 216 N. W. 294, 116 Neb. 125.

S.D.—State v. Denevan, 206 N.W. 927, 49 S.D. 192.

4. Colo.—Haddock v. People, 188 P. 2d 891, 117 Colo. 416.

5. Driver of motor vehicle

The prosecution must show that accused was the driver of the motor vehicle as alleged.—State v. Schneiders, 137 S.W.2d 439, 349 Mo. 899.

Effect of admission

Statement of accused that he was so drunk at time of accident that he did not know what had happened was no admission that his automobile had struck pedestrian and did not relieve the state of burden of proving that accused's automobile killed pedestrian.—State v. Miller, 19 N.W.2d 271, 247 Wis. 339.

a reasonable doubt the guilt of accused.⁶ Thus the prosecution has the burden to show beyond a reasonable doubt that accused committed an act of the character necessary to constitute the offense charged,⁷ as that accused was culpably negligent, where negligence is the gravamen of the offense,⁸ or was driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor,⁹ and that the wrongful acts charged,¹⁰ such as the negligence¹¹ or unlawful act¹² of accused, proximately caused the death of deceased. Where a statute makes a death resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle by an intoxicated person of itself constitute a criminal homicide, there is no burden on the state to establish that an intoxicated motorist was negligent.¹³ It is not incumbent on the state to show that one killed by a motor vehicle was free from contributory negligence¹⁴ or that the death was not the result of an unavoidable accident.¹⁵

Accused is required to meet evidence tending to show that death proximately resulted from his acts.¹⁶

Presumptions and inferences. Accused cannot be convicted of the offense charged through the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.¹⁷ It will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that accused exercised due care in operating his motor vehicle¹⁸ and that the vehicle was properly equipped.¹⁹ On the other hand, a driver is presumed to have intended the natural consequences of his act²⁰ and to have anticipated the possibility of any natural result of his negligence.²¹ One accused of manslaughter by driving at an excessive speed must be presumed to know the provisions of the law limiting the speed of motor vehicles.²² Negligence may be inferred from the mere fact of the operation of a motor vehicle in violation of law,²³ but the mere happening of the collision or accident raises no presumption of negligence.²⁴ Malice may be implied or presumed from the reckless, wanton, and gross carelessness with which a motor vehicle is operated,²⁵ but it cannot be inferred from the mere fact of the operation of the vehicle in violation of law.²⁶

A presumption of malice necessary to support a conviction of assault with intent to murder may arise from a reckless disregard of human life,²⁷ and if the manner of use of the motor vehicle is such as is likely or calculated to produce death the presumption obtains that death was intended.²⁸ An intoxicated driver is presumed to be able to think and to form purposes and intentions, until the contrary is shown.²⁹

b. Admissibility

- (2) Intoxication
- (3) Speed
- (4) Reputation and habits of accused

(1) In General

In a prosecution for the death of a person killed by or because of the operation of a motor vehicle, evidence is admissible which tends to establish any of the essential elements of the crime or to connect the accused therewith, or which justly tends to exculpate the accused or to reduce the grade of the offense.

In conformity with the rules governing the admissibility of evidence in prosecutions for a homicide generally, considered in Homicide §§ 200-311, evidence which tends to establish any of the essential elements of the crime or to connect accused therewith, or which justly tends to exculpate accused or to reduce the grade of the offense, ordinarily is admissible in a prosecution for the death of a person killed by or because of the operation of a motor vehicle.³⁰ In general the entire circumstances surrounding the homicide are proper for the jury's consideration in determining the liability of accused, and evidence thereof is admissible.³¹ Evidence is admissible of the negligent op-

Permit to move building on highway

Where failure to obtain permit to move building on county road was not a proximate cause of the death of motorist who collided with building on highway at night not protected by flares, evidence was not admissible of the failure of accused to have such a permit, and its introduction was not justified by the fact that the state, without objection, introduced evidence showing that accused had procured a permit to transport it over a state highway.—State v. 30 C.J. p 216 note 5 [g]—42 C.J. p 1361 note 30.

Circumstances to be considered

In determining whether there was criminal negligence, jury could consider type of the road, that accused had rounded a curve only a short distance from scene of collision, the speed at which accused's truck was traveling, the character of surface of road, and that accused's truck, with ample room to pass on its right-hand side of road, crossed to left side of road and struck automobile in which deceased was riding.—Thomas v. State, 38 S.E.2d 188, 73 Ga.App. 803.

Injury to other persons

(1) Evidence of injury to persons other than deceased has been held admissible.

Ill.—People v. Jeffers, 25 N.E.2d 85, 372 Ill. 590, certiorari denied Jeffers v. People of State of Illinois, 60 S.Ct. 1081, 310 U.S. 638, 84 L.Ed. 1407.

eration of the vehicle by accused,³² of the negligence of deceased,³³ of the condition of the motor vehicle,³⁴ of the condition of its brakes,³⁵ of accused's flight from the scene of the accident,³⁶ or that accused left the body of deceased lying in the road after striking him.³⁷ Evidence as to the manner in which accused was driving a short distance, or shortly, before the accident has been held admissible,³⁸ where the circumstances tend to identify the vehicle as that of accused, even though it is not actually identified as such;³⁹ but evidence as to the manner accused was driving before⁴⁰ or after⁴¹ the accident is not admissible where it is too remote to have any probative value.

Consciousness of guilt. Testimony of a statement made by accused before his arrest that the police were searching for him is admissible, as showing his consciousness of guilt.⁴² However, testimony that after the homicide accused boasted about turning off the lights of his car is a conclusion of the witness as to such statements.⁴³

Ordinances. Under various circumstances the introduction in evidence of ordinances relating to speed and traffic have been held proper,⁴⁴ but an

Tex.—Brewer v. State, 143 S.W.2d 599, 140 Tex.Cr. 9.

(2) However, in a prosecution for murder, the manner and extent of injury suffered by others in the accident have been held not admissible and irrelevant and inflammatory.—McKee v. State, 102 S.W.2d 1058, 132 Tex.Cr. 67.

Possession of driver's license

(1) Evidence that accused did not have a driver's license has been held admissible.—People v. Warner, 80 P. 2d 737, 27 Cal.App.2d 190.

(2) Other authority, however, has held that evidence accused did not have a driver's license is not admissible, since the failure to have a driver's license was not the proximate cause of the death of deceased.—Roberts v. Commonwealth, 95 S.W. 2d 23, 264 Ky. 545.

Held admissible

(1) Evidence to show the distance within which the vehicle could have been stopped.—Roberts v. Commonwealth, supra.

(2) Location of scattered brains of deceased.—Reynolds v. State, 134 So. 815, 24 Ala.App. 240, certiorari denied 134 So. 817, 223 Ala. 130.

Prerequisite to admissibility

As a prerequisite to admission of evidence of condition of brakes after automobile had been wrecked, the state should have shown continuance of the condition immediately before the wreck.—Turrell v. State, 51 N.E. 2d 359, 221 Ind. 682.

Evidence held admissible

(1) Of distance required to stop accused's automobile.—People v. Isbell, 2 N.E.2d 84, 363 Ill. 264.

(2) That before sale of vehicle to accused its wheel locked when the brakes were applied, where accused claimed the accident was caused by a like mishap.—Commonwealth v. Tackett, 187 S.W.2d 297, 299 Ky. 731.

Evidence held inadmissible

Where accused did not see the persons he struck until he was right on top of them evidence that, some time after accident, brakes on his truck were examined by a mechanic and found to be very defective, was properly rejected.—State v. Dickert, 79 P.2d 328, 194 Wash. 629.

invalid ordinance is not admissible in evidence.⁴⁵ In a prosecution for manslaughter by driving in a business or closely built-up section of a city at a greater rate of speed than is permitted by the statute in such places, it is not competent to prove the violation by an ordinance of the municipality defining what are the business and closely built-up portions thereof;⁴⁶ but a municipal regulation duly passed in the exercise of the local police power is admissible in evidence to establish the general and usual rules of a road within the municipality upon which a homicide occurred, in a prosecution for manslaughter predicated on the violation of a statute prohibiting the operation of vehicles at an unreasonable speed, having regard for the circumstances and the usual rules of the road,⁴⁷ notwithstanding the rules established by such ordinance are not the rules generally and uniformly operating throughout the state.⁴⁸

Testimony on cross-examination. It has been held proper on cross-examination to question a witness as to whether accused had told him that when he ran over deceased he thought it was another person, and, if the witness denies it, it is competent to inquire whether he had not told another person that accused had made such a statement to him and to rebut his denial with such person's testimony.⁴⁹

(2) Intoxication

Where one of the essential elements of the homicide charged is culpable negligence or some other degree thereof, or driving while intoxicated, evidence is admissible that the accused was driving while intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

Where the gist of a charge of a criminal homicide is accused's culpable negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle, or driving while intoxicated, evidence is admissible that he was at the time of the homicide under the influence of intoxicating liquor⁵⁰ or that his breath smelled of alcohol or liquor.⁵¹ Also the state may introduce evidence as to the sobriety of all the occupants of the vehicle;⁵² and testimony that the companions of accused had liquor and were under its influence is admissible as part of the res gestæ and as tending to show his opportunity to obtain it.⁵³ Evidence is admissible that bottles of liquor, or partially filled bottles of liquor, were found in the vehicle after the accident,⁵⁴ or near the scene of the homicide,⁵⁵ or were thrown from the vehicle,⁵⁶ or that accused attempted to dispose of liquor found therein.⁵⁷ A witness may testify that accused was "under

Title and number

Where the court cannot take judicial notice of a city ordinance unless pleaded at least by title and number, an ordinance is inadmissible in evidence when not so referred to in the indictment.—State v. Sandvig, 251 P. 887, 141 Wash. 542.

45. Utah.—State v. Lingman, 91 P. 2d 457, 97 Utah 180.

Statutory prerequisites

A city ordinance establishing a speed limit is not admissible in evidence in the absence of a showing that the municipality has complied with a statute relative to the establishment of business and suburban districts and the posting of signs, without which such an ordinance is ineffectual.—*State v. Effort to induce accused on cross-examination to tell why he wanted to dispose of a case of beer which was found in the back of his automobile at the time of the accident was held not error.—Wallace v. State, 170 S.W.2d 762, 145 Tex. Cr. 625.

the influence of liquor," as a statement of fact based on his conduct and appearance at the time.⁵⁸

Intoxication before or after the accident. Evidence is admissible of accused's use of intoxicating liquor, or intoxicated condition shortly before⁵⁹ or after⁶⁰ the commission of the offense. Also evidence is admissible that shortly before the accident accused was in company where liquor was being consumed,⁶¹ or that on the day of the accident accused had tried to borrow money to enable a companion to buy whisky, such evidence bearing on the fact that he and his party intended to provide themselves therewith for the occasion.⁶² Evidence as to the manner in which accused drove the motor vehicle before⁶³ or after⁶⁴ the accident and some distance from the place thereof has been held admissible, as relevant and material, when near enough in time to bear on the extent to which his intoxication caused the homicide, and the remoteness goes rather to its weight than to its admissibility.⁶⁵ Evidence is not admissible, however, that accused was under the influence of intoxicating liquor or had liquor on his breath at a remote period prior to⁶⁶ or after⁶⁷ the accident.

Capacity for intent. While intoxication is not an excuse for crime, as discussed supra § 658, evidence thereof is admissible in favor of accused in a prosecution for murder in the first degree on the question whether or not he was capable of forming the necessary intent.⁶⁸

(3) Speed

Where the negligence of the operator of the motor vehicle or the violation of a speed law is an essential element of the homicide charged, evidence of the speed of the vehicle is admissible.

Where the negligence of the operator of the motor vehicle or the violation of a speed law is an essential element of the homicide charged, testimony is admissible as to the speed of the vehicle.⁶⁹ On the question of speed, evidence is admissible of the relevant circumstances which tend to show its speed,⁷⁰ including evidence of the track or marks made on the ground by a motor vehicle which skidded, swerved, or slid at the accident, and the distance of such skidding, swerving, or sliding.⁷¹

Where a statute makes driving in excess of a specified speed merely prima facie evidence of unlawfulness, accused may introduce evidence of surrounding circumstances to overcome a prima facie case established on the basis of excessive speed.⁷²

Speed at place distant from the accident. Evidence of the speed of a motor vehicle at a point remote from the place of a homicide is inadmissible,⁷³ as is evidence of the average speed of the motor vehicle over a particular distance or time,⁷⁴ because of the rapidity with which the rate may be changed;⁷⁵ but, where it is not too remote, evidence as to the speed at which accused was driving his vehicle before reaching the point of the accident is competent,⁷⁶ as is also the fact that accused had been racing just prior thereto.⁷⁷ Testimony as to the speed of a motor vehicle observed by a witness is admissible when it is sufficiently identified as the vehicle driven by accused,⁷⁸ and in some instances such testimony has been held admissible where the circumstances tend to identify the vehicle as that of accused, even though it is not actually identified as such,⁷⁹ but other authority has held such testimony not admissible where the vehicle is not sufficiently identified as the one driven by accused.⁸⁰ Evidence that the witness was frightened at the speed of the vehicle of accused when accused passed him has been held not admissible.⁸¹

(4) Reputation and Habits of Accused

Evidence of the general reputation and habits of a person accused of a homicide in the operation of a motor vehicle is admissible.

Where one is charged with negligent homicide, evidence of his general reputation as a law-abiding citizen is admissible,⁸² and he is not confined to proving merely his reputation as a careful and prudent man.⁸³ Evidence has also been held admissible that accused was a reckless driver.⁸⁴ Evidence of accused's record with his employer, however, has been held not admissible;⁸⁵ and evidence of his general habits of driving may properly be excluded, where the circumstances of the homicide are clearly described by the witnesses.⁸⁶

c. Weight and Sufficiency

- (1) In general
- (2) Circumstantial evidence
- (3) Speed
- (4) Particular offenses and elements thereof

(1) In General

In order to sustain a conviction for a criminal homicide arising from the operation of a motor vehicle, the evidence must be sufficient to establish all elements of the offense and to show the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt.

The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in criminal cases apply in prosecutions for homicide through the agency of a motor vehicle.⁸⁷ In order to sustain a conviction of such a homicide the evidence must be sufficient to

Condition of brakes

Evidence of condition of brakes on motor vehicle after it had been wrecked, in absence of evidence proving there had been no change therein, tended to prove only brake condition when witness' examination was made, and was lacking in proba-

establish beyond a reasonable doubt the guilt of accused,⁸⁸ and also those specific elements of the offense which are applicable to the grade or degree of homicide of which accused is convicted.⁸⁹ The evidence must be sufficient to establish the cause of death⁹⁰ and that the acts accused is charged to have committed proximately caused the death,⁹¹

and where it merely establishes the existence of such acts it is not sufficient.⁹² Also, where it is an essential element of the offense, the evidence must establish beyond a reasonable doubt that accused was guilty of negligence of the requisite character or degree,⁹³ or that accused was guilty

Sufficient for punitive damages

The evidence should be as strong as that required for imposition of punitive damages in civil suit, wherein plaintiff must show accused's gross and flagrant negligence, evincing reckless disregard of human life or safety of persons exposed to its dangerous effects.—Savage v. State, 11 So.2d 778, 152 Fla. 367.

Tragic character of accident

The deeply deplorable and tragic character of accident and heart-rending results thereof cannot be made basis or premise for determining acts or guilt, but they must be ascertained and determined solely from evidence as to occurrence complained of.—Barnett v. State, 184 So. 702, 28 Ala.App. 293, certiorari denied 184 So. 709, 236 Ala. 666.

Possibility of suicide

Possibility that deceased purposely threw herself in front of automobile was held insufficient to create reasonable doubt of driver's guilt.—People v. Black, 295 P. 87, 111 Cal.App. 90, vacation of judgment denied 300 P. 43, 114 Cal.App. 468.

89. Tex.—Schorr v. State, 132 S.W.2d 898, 137 Tex.Cr. 625.

Principal or accessory

Which of two men, charged with causing death by operating automobile in reckless manner while under influence of intoxicating liquor, was principal, and which accessory, cannot be left to surmise and conjecture.—Quintana v. People, 102 P.2d 486, 106 Colo. 174.

Conditions prerequisite to application of statute

(1) The state had burden to show beyond reasonable doubt that attachment to motor vehicle was a trailer and not semitrailer before jury could consider statute applying limitation on speed of trucks with trailers attached.—State v. Brooks, 186 S.E. 227, 210 N.C. 273.

(2) The state has the burden to prove beyond reasonable doubt that as a matter of fact curve or turn involved was a sharp curve or turn within statute prescribing speed limit on approaching such a curve or turn.—State v. Corley, 182 S.E. 794, 116 W.Va. 630.

Criminal negligence

Ill.—People v. Przybyl, 6 N.E.2d 848, 365 Ill. 515.

Gross negligence such as to evince a wanton or reckless disregard for the safety of human life, or such an indifference to the consequences of accused's act as to render conduct tantamount to wilfulness has been required in prosecution for manslaughter.—Smith v. State, 20 So.2d 701, 197 Miss. 802, 161 A.L.R. 1.

More happening of accident does not prove that motorist was negligent.—Commonwealth v. Stosny, 31 A.2d 582, 152 Pa.Super. 236—Commonwealth v. Gill, 182 A. 103, 120 Pa.Super. 22.

Attendant circumstances may supply evidence of negligence.—Commonwealth v. Gill, supra.

Revocation of license

Fact that driver's license of accused had been judicially revoked, of wantonness,⁹⁴ or that he was driving while intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquor,⁹⁵ or with intent to kill.⁹⁶ Proof that decedent was guilty of negligence contributing to his own injury is sufficient to carry to the jury the question whether the homicide was unintentional, although the result of accused's culpable negligence.⁹⁷ Where a motorist's conduct in the operation of a motor vehicle resulting in the death of another includes all the elements of both a higher and a lower offense, a verdict finding him guilty of the lower offense will not be disturbed on the ground that it is contrary to the evidence.⁹⁸

Character and reputation. Testimony as to the good character of accused is to be taken in connection with all the other evidence,⁹⁹ and to be given such weight under all the facts and circumstances as the jury think it entitled to;¹ but his reputation for being a careful and skillful driver does not show freedom from gross negligence in failing to stop after danger to decedent became apparent.²

Conflict with physical facts. Where the physical facts show evidence to be untrue, it need not be believed.³

Conviction or acquittal of other offense based on the same accident. In a prosecution for manslaughter committed by driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated, there can be no merit in a claim of lack of evidence that accused was driving the vehicle at the time of the accident, where he has urged in bar of the prosecution his own prior conviction for driving while intoxicated, based on the same transaction;⁴ on the other hand, acquittal on a charge of failure to report an accident is not conclusive, on a prosecution for manslaughter based on the same accident, that there was no such accident or that accused was not chargeable with reckless driving.⁵

(2) Circumstantial Evidence

The guilt of the accused may be established by circumstantial evidence.

The guilt of the accused may be established by circumstantial evidence,⁶ at least where resort to and that he was operating automobile notwithstanding such revocation, was evidence of negligence—Benton v. State, 247 N.W. 21, 124 Neb. 485.

Effect of statute

Fact that statute providing that person operating vehicle in reckless or culpably negligent manner, whereby a human being is killed, is guilty of criminal negligence differs somewhat from manslaughter statute does not change degree of proof required to convict a person of reckless or culpable negligence—People v. Williams, 61 N.Y.S.2d 252, 187 Misc. 239.

95. Tex.—Hittson v. State, 114 S.W. 2d 881, 134 Tex.Cr. 131.

Conclusiveness of odor of whisky on motorist's breath

The fact that a witness testified that breath of motorist carried odor of whiskey, did not absolutely and unqualifiedly show that he was drunk.—Moore v. State, 150 S.W.2d 91, 141 Tex.Cr. 570.

Driving recklessly or in violation of law does not tend to prove that the driver was under the influence of intoxicating liquor.—State v. Johnson, 287 P. 909, 76 Utah 84.

Proof of intoxication is not indispensable to conviction of manslaughter, where the charge is based on culpable negligence in operating an automobile at an unlawful speed while intoxicated, by colliding with deceased, and there is ample proof that accused was driving at an unlawful and dangerous rate under conditions that warranted finding of culpable negligence—Hobbs v. State, 91 So 555, 83 Fla. 480

96. Assault with intent to murder

In prosecution for assault with intent to murder, intent must be established by evidence sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that the injury was caused by the reckless and wanton disregard of human life—Mundy v. State, 1 S.E. 2d 605, 59 Ga.App. 509.

Recklessness amounting to intent

Facts necessary to prove such recklessness as would amount in law to intentional killing in driving of an automobile must be proved beyond reasonable doubt—Barnett v. State, 171 So. 293, 27 Ala.App. 277, certiorari denied 171 So. 296, 233 Ala. 182.

Testimony held not discredited

Uncontroverted testimony that defendant's automobile, after the collision, turned over a couple of times and landed on its right side approximately ninety feet from the point of collision, and that the automobile collided with overturned and remained practically at the point of the collision was held not to discredit testimony of the driver of the latter automobile as to his efforts to avoid the collision.—*Commonwealth v. such evidence is necessary.⁷ Such evidence, however, must be weighed with care,⁸ and the facts from which the inference of accused's guilt is drawn must be established with certainty;⁹ and it is insufficient where it does not exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of guilt.¹⁰ The action of a driver in failing to stop or render assistance when he is aware of having struck another person is a circumstance indicative of guilt on his part,¹¹ and a showing that he was intoxicated at the time of the homicide is a persuasive factor.¹²

(3) Speed

Where the speed of a motor vehicle is a factor in determining the guilt of the accused, competent evidence of its speed or excessive speed, or of what speed is unlawful or improper, may be considered.

Where the speed of a motor vehicle is a factor in determining the guilt of one accused of a criminal homicide through the agency of a motor vehicle, competent evidence of its speed or excessive speed,¹³ or of what speed is unlawful or improper,¹⁴ may be considered. Testimony as to the speed of the motor vehicle is of little probative value, however, where it is based on a momentary glimpse of the vehicle approaching head on,¹⁵ or merely on the condition of the highway and of the vehicles after the collision,¹⁶ or is merely that the motor vehicle was going "fast" or "slowly," and is made without comparison with other vehicles whose speed is known, or in the absence of a showing of facts and circumstances from which some estimate can be made as to what the witness means by such expressions;¹⁷ and evidence as to the speed of the vehicle at some distance from the place of the homicide is of little or no force.¹⁸ Evidence of the distance a vehicle slid or skidded raises merely an inference as to its speed.¹⁹ The fact that a motor vehicle was being operated at an excessive or unlawful speed will not exclude the possibility that the failure of accused to regain control of his vehicle after it began to skid was due to a mechanical defect in the vehicle.²⁰ Speed alone, it has been held, will not sustain a conviction of the offense of criminal negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle resulting in death.²¹ In numer-

(4) Particular Offenses and Elements Thereof

Pursuant to the general rules relative to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence in criminal cases, the courts have frequently held particular evidence sufficient or insufficient to establish a particular element of a criminal homicide by operation of a motor vehicle or to sustain a conviction therefor.

In accordance with the general rules governing the weight and sufficiency of the evidence in criminal cases, the courts in various cases have held the evidence sufficient to support particular findings or to establish specific elements of the offense,²⁴ such as to establish the corpus delicti,²⁵ the death of the person for whose homicide accused is on trial,²⁶ that accused was the driver of the vehicle that caused the death,²⁷ or that the motor vehicle of accused was the one that caused the death of the deceased,²⁸ or to show intent to kill,²⁹ or negligence of varying degrees or character,³⁰ or that accused was intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquor at the time of the accident,³¹

killing by operating a vehicle at excessive speed,⁶⁸ or of assault with intent to murder,⁶⁹ or to sustain the conviction of an owner or proprietor of a motor vehicle for a death resulting from its operation when driven by another.⁷⁰

§ 667. — Questions of Law and Fact

It is the province of the court, in prosecutions for homicides occasioned through the operation of motor vehicles and for assault with intent to kill or murder, to determine questions of law, and that of the jury to determine issues of fact.

In accordance with the rules in prosecutions for homicide generally, considered in Homicide §§ 338-353, in prosecutions for homicides occasioned through the operation of motor vehicles and for assault with intent to kill or murder, ordinarily it is the province of the court to determine questions of law,⁷¹ and that of the jury to determine, under proper instructions, issues of fact,⁷² such as the weight to be given the evidence⁷³ and the credibility of the witnesses.⁷⁴ Where there is evidence on which the jury may justifiably find the existence or nonexistence of any material facts in issue, and the evidence is conflicting or of such a character that different conclusions may reasonably be drawn therefrom, the issues should be submitted to the jury.⁷⁵ In order to justify the submission of a material issue to the jury, however, there must be sufficient evidence to support it,⁷⁶ and where there is no evidence on an issue of fact or the evidence is legally insufficient to go to the jury as to such fact, or is undisputed and of such a character that only one inference reasonably can be drawn therefrom, the court may dispose of it without the intervention of a jury by refusing to submit it to the jury, as by sustaining a demurrer to the evidence, by dismissal or nonsuit, or by affirmative charge or direction of a verdict.⁷⁷ In general the guilt or innocence of ac-

Evidence required

The rule that where there is a scintilla of evidence to support the charge the issue is for the jury has no application in a prosecution for a homicide caused by the operation of a motor vehicle.—Willis v. State, 197 So. 62, 29 Ala.App. 365, certiorari denied 197 So. 67, 240 Ala. 52, overruling Lewis v. State, 162 So. 552, 26 Ala.App. 515.

Rule as to consideration of all evidence

Principle that motion to dismiss as of nonsuit at close of all evidence must be considered in light of all evidence was held inapplicable where testimony of witnesses for accused supported the case for the prosecution on controverted issues.—State v. Leonard, 141 S.E. 736, 195 N.C. 242.

Speed

Evidence of the distance a vehicle slid or skidded has been held not alone sufficient to carry the issue of the vehicle's speed to the jury.—Ronning v. State, 200 N.W. 394, 184 Wis. 651.

79. Epileptic condition

(1) Where accused claimed that epilepsy caused him to be unconscious from the time of his departure on the drive until after the accident, question for jury was not whether accused knew facts which would lead a reasonable man to realize that the contemplated drive would create an unreasonable risk of bodily harm to others but was whether accused failed to do something which a reasonably prudent man would have done under the circumstances.—People v. Freeman, 142 P.2d 435, 61 Cal. App.2d 110.

(2) Whether accused had the power of an ordinarily prudent man to estimate the significance of his undertaking to drive, whether he clearly recognized his probable early collapse, and whether his transition to unconsciousness was sudden, whether it occurred on the highway prior to the collision, or whether it had taken place during a visit before accused's departure and as the result of an epileptic attack were for the jury.—People v. e. Requested instructions

Proper instructions as to the nature and elements of the offense charged and of the requirements for conviction thereof must be given in a prosecution for a death caused by the operation of a motor vehicle, or for an assault with intent to kill or murder.

The rules relating to instructions in prosecutions for homicide generally, considered in Homicide §§ 354-399, apply to a prosecution for causing death by the operation of a motor vehicle, or for assault with intent to kill or murder, except in so far as the means and circumstances under and by which the crime is committed require instructions peculiar thereto.²³ The court should define accurately the offense or offenses with which accused is charged, setting forth clearly the essential elements thereof and the law thereon.²⁴ This requires the court to give correct instructions on each issue

Accused was held entitled to instruction that state had burden to ceased,³⁹ unavoidable accident,⁴⁰ justifiable and excusable homicide,⁴¹ and the negligence or contributory negligence of deceased or others.⁴²

Definition of terms. Where the pleadings and evidence make them material, the court should define the terms "gross negligence," "reckless," "wanton," and other such technical terms.⁴³

Construction as a whole. In view of the rule that the entire law of the case need not be stated in a single instruction and that all the instructions must be considered together, a particular instruction omitting some element of the offense or the finding is not erroneous where such matter is fully covered by other instructions.⁴⁴

b. Applicability to Pleadings and Evidence

The instructions should be applicable to the issues raised in the pleadings and be supported by the evidence.

The instructions should conform to the indictment, information, or affidavit and to the evidence,⁴⁵ and also should fully and fairly declare the law applicable to any defense offered by accused which is supported by the evidence and raises an issue of fact favorable to him.⁴⁶ Thus an instruction is erroneous and should not be given show beyond reasonable doubt that vehicle was of character to which speed limit statute applied—State v. Brooks, 186 S.E. 237, 210 N.C. 273.

Defense based on epilepsy

In prosecution for negligent homicide by automobile with defense that epilepsy caused accused to be unconscious from the time of his depart-which authorizes a conviction on the basis of acts not alleged,⁴⁷ as where it does not limit the jury to the acts of negligence alleged,⁴⁸ or is on the statutory duty of a driver to stop and give his name or render assistance in case of an accident, where accused is not charged with violation of such statute.⁴⁹ Also instructions are erroneous and should not be given which are without support in the evidence,⁵⁰ such as instructions as to a grade or degree of homicide not supported by the evidence,⁵¹ or on issues or a state of facts not supported thereby,⁵² or which imply unproved facts,⁵³ or which authorize the jury to make findings which are not supported by the evidence,⁵⁴ or which are as to the care or duty of a driver under circumstances which do not appear in the evidence.⁵⁵ Where there is no evidence to support certain acts charged in an indictment, they should be withdrawn from the jury.⁵⁶ On the other hand, instructions are proper which authorize a conviction on any of several acts charged, each of which is sufficient to support the offense charged.⁵⁷

Under the pleadings and evidence of various cases, particular instructions have been held warranted,⁵⁸ including instructions relative to death caused by misadventure or unavoidable accident,⁵⁹

ture on the drive until after the accident, instruction should have authorized acquittal if accused was unconscious at the time of the accident, and such state of being had wholly or to a material extent overtaken him before leaving.—People v. Freeman, 142 P.2d 435, 61 Cal.App.2d 110.

c. Statutes and Ordinances

The court may include in its instructions a statement of any valid statute or ordinance, or the substance thereof, relative to the operation of motor vehicles which is applicable to the facts of the case as developed by the evidence.

At the trial of a person charged with causing the death of another by the operation of a motor vehicle the court may read to the jury, or give the substance of, any valid statute or ordinance relative to the operation of motor vehicles which is applicable to the facts of the case as developed by the evidence,⁶⁶ even though a violation of such statute or ordinance is not specifically alleged in the indictment or information.⁶⁷ However, it has been held that an ordinance or statute should not be embodied in the instructions where the pleadings do not make its violation a basis of the offense

charged⁶⁸ or where there is no evidence in the case which would make the statute applicable therein.⁶⁹ Also, in a prosecution founded on criminal negligence, an ordinance making every accident a violation of the city laws should not be embodied in the instructions.⁷⁰ Instructions which incorporate statutory provisions expressly made inapplicable to acts committed in driving a motor vehicle are erroneous.⁷¹ It is error to read to the jury a statute applicable only under circumstances which do not appear in the case, without plainly indicating that it does not apply.⁷²

d. Other Offenses or Grades or Degrees of Offense Charged

The court should instruct on other offenses or lesser grades or degrees of homicide included within the offense charged and which are supported by the evidence, but not on offenses not included within the offense charged or which are not supported by the evidence, unless by way of illustration.

Ordinarily on a trial for a criminal homicide by the operation of a motor vehicle the court may and should instruct on grades or lower degrees of homicide included within the offense charged and supported by the evidence.⁷³ Thus instruc-

Part of statute

Failure to include part of statute accused was not charged with violating was held not error.—State v. Williams, 28 N.W.2d 514, 238 Iowa 838.

Explanatory instructions telling the jury how instructions giving the substance of certain statutes should be considered were held unnecessary where all of the instructions given gave the jury aid it required, if any, in considering applicability of instructions given.—People v. Pierce, 15 N.E.2d 845, 369 Ill. 172.

Where statutes or ordinances not applicable

(1) In prosecution for manslaughter for running down pedestrian, violation of parking ordinance by third person was held to have no bearing on the case and not to require instruction regarding such ordinance.—State v. Gee, 284 P. 845, 48 Idaho 688.

(2) Instruction that vehicles have right of way except at crossings was held properly refused where the crossing was unobstructed.—State v. Gee, supra.

(3) Instruction respecting statute which was inapplicable because passed after offense charged was properly refused.—State v. Stelljes, 184 So. 373, 172 La. 401.

Validity of ordinance

Where the validity of an ordinance depends on compliance by the municipality with a statute, an instruction referring to the ordinance is improper in the absence of proof of such compliance.—State v. Clark, 196 N.W. 82, 196 Iowa 1134—42 C.J. p 1365 note 17.

Instructions held proper

(1) Instruction submitting issue of manslaughter in the second degree as an included offense in charge of manslaughter in the first degree.—Ray v. State, Okl.Cr., 189 P.2d 620.

(2) On manslaughter in the fourth

tions which ignore, exclude, or tend to exclude a lower or intermediate grade or degree of homicide, which is comprehended by the indictment and evidence, are erroneous.⁷⁴ Also, in a prosecution for murder committed by running into decedent with an automobile, it is not error to mention in the instructions the various kinds of manslaughter, by way of illustration.⁷⁵ However, an instruction on a lesser offense than that charged need not be given where the evidence is such that accused cannot properly be convicted thereof,⁷⁶ as where the evidence shows that accused is either guilty of the character or degree of offense charged or entirely innocent,⁷⁷ or where the evidence establishes the absence of an element essential to the lesser offense.⁷⁸ Also, in a prosecution for manslaughter, it is not proper to instruct on murder, where there is no evidence of malice or intention to kill,⁷⁹ although such an instruction is not prejudicial where it is limited to pointing out the distinctions between murder and manslaughter.⁸⁰ When accused is charged with voluntary manslaughter, it is proper to instruct the jury on involuntary manslaughter, in view of the difficulty of distinguishing between the facts constituting the two offenses when committed by the operation of a motor vehicle.⁸¹ It is not error to refuse to charge on an offense not included within the homicide charged.⁸² The failure to charge the law of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of a lawful act in an unlawful manner is not error in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder.⁸³

e. Requested Instructions

The court should give requested instructions which correctly state the law and which are warranted by the pleadings and evidence, and which are not covered by other instructions.

The court is required to give properly requested instructions which correctly propound the law and are warranted by the pleading and evidence, and are not covered by other instructions,⁸⁴ including instructions as to defenses set up by accused and supported by evidence,⁸⁵ and, while in general it cannot modify, qualify, or limit them,⁸⁶ it may explain instructions so requested and given.⁸⁷ Also additional matter may and should be included where the requested instruction, while correct, is likely to be misleading,⁸⁸ or where it does not completely and accurately state the rule applicable to degree in prosecution on a charge of manslaughter in the first degree.—State v. Gloyd, 84 P.2d 966, 148 Kan. 706.

(3) In a murder prosecution the court should instruct on the law of manslaughter if there is any evidence that the alleged crime might have been committed under circumstances that would reduce the crime from murder to manslaughter.—Tucker v. State, 92 P.2d 595, 66 Okl. Cr. 335.

§ 670. — Judgment, Sentence, and Punishment

The sentence imposed on one convicted of some grade of criminal homicide for a death resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle must be in conformity with the punishment provided thereby by statute.

The sentence imposed on one convicted of some grade of criminal homicide for a death resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle must be in conformity with the punishment provided therefor by statute, and in some jurisdictions is fixed by statutes specifically applicable to deaths resulting from the operation of motor vehicles and not under statutes applicable to homicides generally.² In some jurisdictions it is within the province of the jury to fix the period of punishment,³ but the place of punishment is solely within the province of the court.⁴

§ 671. — Appeal and Error

A conviction for a homicide resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle will be reversed on appeal for error prejudicial to the accused, but it will not be reversed for harmless or nonprejudicial error.

A conviction for a homicide resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle will be reversed on appeal for error prejudicial to accused in the trial of the case;⁵ but it will not be reversed for error which has not been prejudicial to accused,⁶ as where evidence improperly admitted was harmless to accused,⁷ or error in the giving of instructions was favorable to accused,⁸ or was with reference to an offense of which accused was not convicted,⁹ or where the jury, on the law and the facts, find accused guilty of a lower degree or grade of homicide than that of which he should have been convicted.¹⁰ Of course, a conviction will not be reversed for a decision of the trial court which was not erroneous.¹¹ A finding of the trier of facts when supported by substantial evidence will not be disturbed by an appellate court.¹² The mere fact that the sentence imposed in the trial court is severe does not authorize the appellate court to modify or reverse the judgment.¹³

§ 672. Loitering; Seeking Employment

Some statutes have penalized loitering on the streets of vehicles for hire seeking employment.

Motor vehicles used for hire and for which their owners have public hack licenses are within the meaning of a police regulation against loitering upon the street of vehicles for hire seeking employment.¹⁴ The owner of the vehicle who knowingly permits the violation of the law may be responsible criminally, although the driver in charge of the vehicle may also have been responsible.¹⁵ Under a statute making it an offense for the driver of a motor vehicle to loiter upon public streets and avenues, conviction is improper where the proof shows that the vehicle was standing at the time of the driver's arrest upon the private property of a railroad company where it had a right to be under a contract between the owner of the taxicab and the railroad company.¹⁶

§ 673. Maliciously Damaging; Malicious Mischief

Injury to, destruction of, or tampering with, a motor vehicle may constitute a criminal offense either under principles relating to malicious mischief generally or under statutes relating to personal property generally or specifically to vehicles or motor vehicles.

In accordance with the principles relating to malicious mischief generally, discussed in Malicious Mischief §§ 1-5, malicious injury to a motor vehicle is an offense.¹⁷ It has been held that a person is guilty of malicious mischief where, while using the car of another, and regardless of the rights of the owner, he operates it in such a reckless manner as to wreck or seriously damage it.¹⁸ A general statute defining the offense of willful and malicious destruction of, or injury to, the personal property of another applies to the destruction of, or injury to, a motor vehicle.¹⁹ Some statutes specifically applicable to vehicles or motor vehicles in various terms penalize injury to, or tampering with, a motor vehicle²⁰ or its contents.²¹ Under a

§ 674. Neglecting Duty after Accident

- a. In general
- b. Validity of statutes or ordinances
- c. Essentials or elements of offense

a. In General

Statutes imposing on the operation of a motor vehicle, in whole or in part, under certain circumstances, the duty to stop, give certain information, render assistance, and make a report, and providing a penalty for failure to comply, are to be given a reasonable construction, or, as sometimes stated, are to be construed strictly in favor of the accused.

The purpose of a statute requiring, in whole or in part, that the operator of a motor vehicle, in case of accident, collision, or injury or damage to person or property, shall stop, give certain information, such as his name and address, render assistance, and make a report to proper authorities, and providing a penalty for failure to comply,²⁷ which is commonly or popularly referred to as a "hit-and-run statute,"²⁸ has been stated in varying terms.²⁹ A statute of this type, being

Examining contents of compartment

Under a statute making the willful injury to, or tampering with, the contents of a vehicle a misdemeanor, a person who was sitting in a motor vehicle and was going through the contents of the glove compartment without the owner's consent was in the act of committing a misdemeanor.—People v. Score, supra.

penal, must be construed reasonably,³⁰ or, as sometimes stated, it must be construed strictly in favor of accused.³¹ Such a statute may not be enlarged by construction or extended by inference to include acts not within its terms,³² and accused cannot be held liable under some statutes for failure to do something which was not necessary or which was not reasonably required.³³

Such a statute has been held to create but one criminal offense, although it may require the performance of several separate acts,³⁴ and there can be but one punishment.³⁵ It has also been held or recognized, however, that a failure to perform any one of several acts designated by the statute may constitute a separate offense.³⁶

Regulations relative to duty after accident are discussed generally supra § 38.

Grade of offense. Some statutes of the general type here under consideration have constituted the offense a felony.³⁷ A statute making it a felony for the driver of an automobile striking any person or vehicle to fail to stop, give his name, and render assistance is not inconsistent with the provisions of a later statute making it a misdemeanor for the driver in such case to fail to stop and give his name, as to the portion requiring the giving of assistance; and therefore a driver indicted for failure to give assistance to an injured person can be convicted and punished as for a felony.³⁸ Under other statutes, however, the particular offense is a misdemeanor, such as failing to stop,³⁹ failing to stop and give information,⁴⁰ leaving the scene of an accident without reporting,⁴¹ or failing to give assistance.⁴²

Jurisdiction. In general, questions as to jurisdiction in a prosecution for an offense of the general type here under consideration depend on the local statutes and rules of practice.⁴³

b. Validity of Statutes or Ordinances

Statutes of the general type here under consideration have generally been regarded as valid.

Determine by place of punishment

In accordance with general rules stated in Criminal Law § 6, it has been held or recognized that the offense under a statute of the type here under consideration which does not in terms characterize the offense either as a felony or as a misdemeanor is a felony, where the statute permits imprisonment in the penitentiary.—Bragan v. (1) It has been held that even since the amendment of 1937, 75 P.S. § 631, a person who fails to stop after his vehicle has collided with, and damaged, property may properly be charged with a misdemeanor under subs. (a), whether the property was attended or unattended.—Commonwealth v. Baker, 53 Pa. Dist. & Co. 702, 61 Montg. Co. 200—Commonwealth v. Wolfendale, 43 Pa. Dist. & Co. 230.

(2) It has been held, however, that, while prior to such amendment failure to stop constituted a misdemeanor or whether the property damaged was attended or unattended, since such amendment failure to stop is a mere summary offense under subs. (d), if the property damaged was unattended.—Commonwealth v. Krivonak, 46 Pa. Dist. & Co. 109, 24 Erie Co. 185—Commonwealth v. Kane, 38 Pa. Dist. & Co. 480.

lice power of the state,⁴⁵ and as not in violation of a constitutional guaranty against self-incrimination.⁴⁶ Such a statute has been upheld as against a claim that it is void for indefiniteness, uncertainty, or vagueness.⁴⁷ It has been held, however, that a statutory provision for rendering such assistance as may be reasonable or necessary after an accident is too vague, indefinite, and uncertain to permit enforcement of such provision, and, therefore, that it cannot properly be the basis of a criminal prosecution.⁴⁸

A municipal ordinance requiring one involved in an accident resulting in injury to any person or property to identify himself and vehicle has been held to be valid as within the limits of police power delegated to the municipal corporation.⁴⁹ A municipal ordinance which requires the rendering of reasonable assistance under penalty has, however, been held to be invalid,⁵⁰ and it has been held that a municipal ordinance requiring the driver or operator of a vehicle involved in an accident which causes injury to a person or which disables a vehicle to make a full report to the police department violates the constitutional guaranty against self-incrimination.⁵¹ A municipal ordinance requiring the operator of a motor vehicle who has been involved in an accident to report such accident to municipal police if the damage is to the apparent extent of a specified amount or more has been held invalid on the ground that the minimum amount fixed by the ordinance is less than that fixed by a statute requiring a like report to a particular state department,⁵² and also on the ground that the penalty prescribed for a violation of such ordinance is in excess of that which the municipality has been allowed to impose for such violation.⁵³

Driving after conviction. A statutory provision making it an offense to drive a motor vehicle within a prescribed period from conviction for leaving after an accident without stopping is valid as a police regulation.⁵⁴

Reasons for, and discussion of, rule

(1) In a case in which the rule stated in the text was apparently recognized, it was stated that the operation of a motor vehicle on public highways is a right and not a privilege which the state may grant or withhold at pleasure and may grant on condition, and that it is permissible to waive the right or immunity as to giving incriminating evidence.—Commonwealth v. Showers, 32 Pa. Dist. & Co. 264.

(2) It has also been stated that, even if the requirements of the statute are construed as violative, of the constitutional privilege against self-incrimination, it would not be necessary to declare the statute invalid in order to obtain the protection of the guaranty, since, if, in the particular case, the constitutional privilege justified the refusal to give the information required by the statute, the question could be raised in the defense of the prosecution.

Filing report with secretary of state

Statutory provision is not unconstitutional as depriving motorist of constitutional guaranty against self-incrimination by requiring the filing of a report with secretary of state when a vehicle is involved in accident resulting in death or injury—Surtman v. c. Essentials or Elements of Offense

- (1) In general
- (2) Knowledge and intent
- (3) Failure to stop
- (4) Failure to furnish information, to report, or to exhibit license
- (5) Failure to render assistance

(1) In General

The duties imposed on the operator of a motor vehicle who has been involved in an accident or who has caused injury to another depend largely on the provisions of the statute.

The duty imposed on the driver of a motor vehicle, who has been involved in an accident or has caused injury to another, is primarily to be determined from the provisions of the statute;⁵⁵ and, where several distinct acts are required of him, the omission of any one or more of them constitutes a 'violation.'⁵⁶ The acts or omissions which constitute the offense of "hit and run" do not commence until after the injury or damage has been inflicted.⁵⁷ The imposition of the duties prescribed by some statutes on a driver "causing" an injury relates to the physical cause of the injury involved rather than to the legal responsibility therefor.⁵⁸

In general, it does not matter whether the person accused caused the injury or collision by a culpable act or whether it occurred through pure accident,⁵⁹ and failure of accused to comply with the statute may be the basis for a finding of guilt under some statutes regardless of how the collision in question occurs or who is at fault.⁶⁰ So, in general, what kind of property was injured⁶¹ or what particular injury was caused⁶² is immaterial. In order to render some statutory provisions operative, it is essential that there should be some damage to property,⁶³ or some substantial damage to property.⁶⁴ Some statutes apply to any motor vehicle, whether it is owned and operated privately or as a common carrier.⁶⁵

The operation of the statutes may be limited to an accident resulting in injury to person or property other than the vehicle under control of accused or its occupants.⁶⁶ Other statutes apply, however, even where the injury is sustained by a person riding in the vehicle driven by accused.⁶⁷

Whether the place where the collision or injury involved occurs is within the operation of the statute depends on the terms of the statute.⁶⁸ Some statutes, either by reason of the fact that the particular statute governs the use of vehicles on public highways⁶⁹ or by reason of express terms,⁷⁰ apply only to collisions or accidents which occur on a street or highway, but other statutes apply whether the offense is committed on a public highway, a private driveway, or other private property.⁷¹

(2) Knowledge and Intent

In general, knowledge on the part of the driver of a motor vehicle that he has struck or injured another person or property or that he has been involved in an accident is essential in order to render him guilty.

As a general rule, a specific intent is not an essential element of the offense,⁷² but knowledge by the driver that he has struck or injured another person or property or that he has been involved in an accident is essential in order to render him guilty of the offense,⁷³ even though it is not expressly so provided by the statute.⁷⁴ According to some cases, in the absence of such express provision, want of such knowledge may constitute a defense,⁷⁵ although the view has been expressed that in such case knowledge is not an ingredient of the offense.⁷⁶ Under some statutes it is not essential that the driver of a vehicle should know that some person,⁷⁷ or some person or property,⁷⁸ has been injured in order to render the statute operative; it is sufficient that the driver knows that he has collided with another vehicle or property⁷⁹ or that his vehicle has struck a person or has collided with a vehicle containing a person.⁸⁰

The knowledge of injury to person or property which is essential to render the statute operative is not an absolute, positive knowledge,⁸¹ and in general, if the circumstances are such as would ordinarily give rise to the belief by a reasonable person that an injury might result, or has resulted, from an accident or collision, it is the duty of the driver to stop.⁸² So, in general, if he knows that a collision or striking has occurred, the obligation is on him to ascertain whether any injury or damage has resulted therefrom;⁸³ and he cannot rely on his alleged lack of knowledge of an injury due to his having driven at an extremely high rate of speed.⁸⁴ It is not essential that the driver should have positive knowledge of the extent of the damage or injuries inflicted,⁸⁵ and his ignorance of the extent of the injuries inflicted does not govern his guilt or innocence.⁸⁶ In some jurisdictions a driver's want of knowledge that his vehicle has struck a person does not excuse him if such want of knowledge is due to his voluntary intoxication.⁸⁷ It has been held that a driver has

Intent to commit acts made criminal

Assuming that intent is a necessary element, it was held that it was not the intent to commit the crime which was a material element but was an intent to commit the acts made criminal by the statute.—Seher v. District of Columbia, 95 F.2d 118, 68 App.D.C. 207.

Knowledge or duty to know

In order to render a driver guilty of the offense of leaving the scene of an accident without reporting, it is essential that he knows, or should know, of the occurrence of the accident and that he is involved in it.—People v. Hakala, 61 N.Y.S.2d 718, 270 App.Div. 612.

Reason for rule

The duty imposed on the driver of the vehicle by the statute is not passive and requires positive, affirmative action, that is to say, to stop and to give aid and information, which affirmative acts cannot be performed unless the driver knows that his vehicle has struck a person or object.—Herchenbach v. Commonwealth, supra.

Knowledge impliedly necessary

Knowledge of the fact of a collision as essential to the offense is necessarily implied in the requirements of a statute requiring drivers of motor vehicles to stop and render aid to those who may have been injured by a collision, especially in view of a general statutory provision that in every criminal offense there must exist a union of act and intent.—People v. Bowlin, 65 P.2d 840, 19 Cal.App.2d 397—People v. Fodera, 184 P. 22, 33 Cal.App. 8.

Informing operator of damage or injury

A person who has been damaged or injured and is entitled to obtain the information contemplated by the statute has the right, if the operator of a motor vehicle is not aware of the infliction of damage by his vehicle, to inform such operator of such infliction of damage.—*Shipp v. no right to rely on a false statement of another who goes back to ascertain what has occurred,⁸⁸ but it has also been held that, where the offense prescribed by the statute is knowingly leaving the place of an accident without disclosing his name and address, one cannot be said "knowingly" to fail to comply with the statute when he, remaining at the place where his own automobile has been disabled by the accident, sends back a messenger with instructions to make such disclosure, and in good faith believes the messenger has done so, although in fact he has not.⁸⁹

(3) Failure to Stop

Where under the statute the duty to stop, or to stop immediately, has arisen after an accident, a failure to stop constitutes a criminal offense.

Where under the statute the duty to stop,⁹⁰ or to stop immediately,⁹¹ has arisen after an accident, a failure to stop constitutes a criminal offense. Under some statutes the driver of a vehicle which strikes any person or collides with any vehicle containing a person must stop regardless of whether anyone is injured.⁹² So under some statutes the duty to stop exists regardless of how a collision or striking occurs or who is at fault;⁹³ such statutes apply notwithstanding the occurrence is an unavoidable accident⁹⁴ or is intentional.⁹⁵

A definite cessation of movement for a sufficient length of time to permit a person of ordinary powers of observation fully to understand the surrounding circumstances and to obtain a knowledge of the results of the accident is essential.⁹⁶ It is not sufficient to stop for an instant, permitting only a cursory examination of the surrounding conditions,⁹⁷ to stop in order to change gears and direction,⁹⁸ or to stop a short distance from the scene of the accident, where the stop is made because the driver has arrived at his destination and not because of the accident.⁹⁹

Where, under a subdivision of the statute, a failure to stop is constituted an offense, a driver who immediately stops is not guilty of such offense, notwithstanding he fails to comply with requirements of another subdivision of the statute.¹

(4) Failure to Furnish Information, to Report, or to Exhibit License

Failure of the operator of a motor vehicle to furnish information with respect to his name, address, and the like under certain circumstances may justify a finding of criminal liability.

Failure of the driver of a motor vehicle to comply with the requirements of a penal statute that, under certain circumstances, he shall give certain information, as, for example, his name, address, or other matters of identification, to certain persons may justify a finding of criminal liability,² and a like rule applies in the case of failure to comply with a statutory requirement to make a report of an accident.³ Under some statutes the necessity to give the required information arises only when a person has been injured or a vehicle

Stopping sufficient

Under a statute requiring a driver who shall injure any person or shall do substantial damage to property to stop, a driver who, when informed of the accident, stopped at the first available parking spot about one hundred fifty feet from point of collision did not violate statute.—*Oden v. Meaning of "immediately"

It has been held that the word "immediately," as used in a statute requiring that a driver "shall immediately stop," does not mean "instantly," and that stopping as promptly as possible under the circumstances is sufficient.—People v. Odom, 66 P.2d 206, 209, 19 Cal.App. 2d 641.

has been damaged,⁴ and a statutory provision requiring the giving of information and the exhibition of license to the person struck or to occupants of any vehicle collided with does not apply where a dog is struck or injured.⁵

Some statutes require in general the tendering on the spot and immediately of explicit and definite information as to the operator or person in charge of the vehicle causing damage or injury of a nature which will identify him readily and make it simple and easy to find him thereafter.⁶ A requirement that the driver "make himself known" uses the words in their ordinary sense, and means that he must disclose his identity, and show or make known to some person or persons in the vicinity who he is, his name, and where he may be found.⁷ A statute providing for the exhibition of license and the giving of name, address, and license number requires both the exhibition of the license and the giving of the specified information,⁸ and merely exhibiting the license does not relieve the driver of criminal liability.⁹

Under some statutes or other governmental regulations a request for the particular information is essential in order to impose criminal liability for failure to give it.¹⁰ According to some cases, however, the statutory provision for a request for information applies only to cases where the person on whom the duty rests stops so as to permit an opportunity to make the request.¹¹

Where the statute so provides, the only person to whom it is essential to give the prescribed information is the person struck or the driver or occupant of, or the person attending, the vehicle with which there has been a collision,¹² and it is not necessary to give such information to other persons who happen to be present.¹³ While under some statutes the required information must be given to the injured person or to a police officer if either is present and capable of receiving the information,¹⁴ under a statute providing in the alternative for giving information to the person sustaining damage or to the police, it is not necessary to furnish the information to the person sustaining damage and also to the police.¹⁵

Under some statutes it is essential to report an occurrence causing injury to a person to certain specified public officials not only where the operator of the vehicle causing the injury is culpable but also where the injury is caused by accident.¹⁶ Some statutes require a report to a specified public officer of an occurrence causing an injury to a person immediately after giving assistance to the injured person and furnishing certain information to such person or to some one in his stead.¹⁷ Where the statute does not fix the time for reporting damage to the nearest police station or judicial officer, the report must be made within a reasonable time.¹⁸

(5) Failure to Render Assistance

Under some statutes failure of the driver of a motor vehicle to render assistance to another under certain circumstances may be the basis of criminal liability.

Under some statutes failure of the driver of a motor vehicle to furnish assistance to others, under certain circumstances, may be the basis of criminal liability.¹⁹ Some statutes impose the duty to render assistance regardless of how the collision or striking occurs or who is at fault;²⁰ they apply notwithstanding the occurrence is an unavoidable accident²¹ or is intentional.²² Under some

"Immediately"

In a statute providing that "the driver of any vehicle which strikes any person . . . shall immediately stop and give his name and address and the names and addresses of all passengers . . . and shall also render to such persons all necessary assistance," the word "immediately" cannot be construed as limiting or modifying the word "render."—People v. Steele, supra.

statutes the duty of a driver to render assistance includes the duty to render assistance to a guest in such driver's vehicle who sustains an injury in an accident in which such vehicle is involved.²³ A statute requiring a driver to render assistance to an injured person does not apply where a vehicle strikes and injures a dog.²⁴

The gist of the offense under some statutes is the willful omission to render reasonable assistance to one who has been injured,²⁵ and a statutory provision for rendering reasonable assistance to an injured person requires the person on whom the duty is imposed to render only such assistance as he sees is necessary.²⁶ What constitutes reasonable or necessary assistance to an injured person required by some statutes depends on the facts of the particular case.²⁷ The assistance is reasonable if it is consistent with that which would be rendered by a prudent man in like circumstances.²⁸ The duty to render reasonable assistance includes the duty to take the injured person to a physician or surgeon for medical or surgical treatment if it is apparent that such treatment is necessary.²⁹ The person on whom the duty to render assistance is imposed need not take any affirmative action in that respect where it is not necessary for him to render assistance because, to his knowledge, others are rendering adequate and sufficient assistance to the injured person.³⁰

As a general rule only the operator of the motor vehicle who fails to stop or render assistance after an accident is guilty of the offense.

It has been stated broadly that, unless otherwise provided, the statute applies only to the operator of the motor vehicle,³¹ and not to the owner of the vehicle or to the master of the operator, as such,³² and does not create any liability on the part of an owner who is not the operator.³³ So some statutes apply only to persons involved in an accident as a part thereof and a party thereto,³⁴ and, in order to render a person liable under some statutes, it is essential that he should be driving, or have control of, a vehicle involved.³⁵ Some statutes impose liability on an operator who is an actor in a collision of his vehicle with a person and not on one who is merely a passive participant.³⁶

Some statutes, however, do not disclose a leg-

All necessary assistance

(1) Under a statute requiring the rendering of all necessary assistance, whether assistance is required and what assistance should be given are matters which are determinable from the standpoint of an ordinary person similarly situated as is the person by whom the assistance is to be rendered, and such statute requires all such assistance as the facts and circumstance would dictate to a person of ordinary temper, disposition, and feeling under like circumstances.—Williams v. State, 102 S.W.2d 212, second case, 132 Tex.Cr. 33.

(2) The statute has also been said to require all the aid which would reasonably appear to one as an ordinary person at the time to be necessary.—Scott v. State, 233 S.W. 1097, 90 Tex.Cr. 100, 16 A.L.R. 1420.

Passenger jumping from vehicle

Where passenger voluntarily jumped from moving automobile and was injured in alighting without coming in contact with the automobile in any manner, the automobile was not involved in an accident within the penal provisions of the statute requiring the driver of any vehicle involved in an accident resulting in injury or death to any person to stop the vehicle immediately.—*Behrens v. "Knowingly colliding"

(1) The words "knowingly colliding" as used in a statute penalizing a departure of the operator of a vehicle without stopping and giving information after knowingly colliding with any person, mean that accused "was in some way the actor, not a mere passive participant in a collision, but to some extent causing the collision or actively colliding."—Commonwealth v. Bleakney, 179 N.E. 400, 278 Mass. 198.

(2) Operator's failure to make herself known after pedestrian walked against motionless car would not sustain conviction for going away without making one's self known "after knowingly colliding" with person.—Commonwealth v. Bleakney, supra.

islative purpose that only the actual perpetrator of the offense shall be guilty of any crime,³⁷ and the general rule that there may be several parties to a crime which, from its nature, may be committed only by one, stated in Criminal Law § 80, applies.³⁸ Accordingly, it has been held or recognized that the term "driver," as used in a statute in terms applicable to the "driver of any vehicle," includes the owner of the vehicle who is present and in control of the vehicle which is being driven by another,³⁹ and that, notwithstanding the statute in terms applies to the "driver" or "operator" of the vehicle, one who is present and in control of the operation of the vehicle,⁴⁰ including the owner,⁴¹ may be liable for noncompliance with the statute, unless the operator disobeys his instructions;⁴² and a person in control of the vehicle who, after a collision or an occurrence causing an injury, takes over the driving and drives away without complying with the statute may be guilty as a principal.⁴³ Some statutes expressly apply to a person in the vehicle who has or assumes authority over the driver and render such person criminally liable for a violation of the particular statute.⁴⁴ Under a statute in terms applicable to the person operating or driving the vehicle, the fact that the accused driver of the vehicle is not the owner is immaterial.⁴⁵

Some statutes are operative and binding on all drivers involved in an accident, regardless of their respective negligence.⁴⁶ The effect of some statutes is not limited to the performance of the required acts by drivers of vehicles which strike and injure pedestrians or which are involved in collision with other vehicles,⁴⁷ but include the drivers of vehicles which are involved in accidents of any nature in which another person is injured or killed.⁴⁸

An occupant of, or passenger in, a motor vehicle who is not driving may be guilty of aiding and abetting in the violation of the statute,⁴⁹ even though such violation is a misdemeanor.⁵⁰ Where, in a joint prosecution under a statute in terms applicable to a person operating or driving a motor vehicle against the driver of, and a passenger in, the vehicle, the driver is found not guilty under evidence applicable to both, the passenger is not guilty as a matter of law.⁵¹

Where the statute imposes various duties on an operator of a motor vehicle after it has been involved in an accident, the fact that the circumstances are such as to prevent a literal compliance with one requirement does not necessarily excuse a failure to comply with the other requirements of the statute.

an injured person is unconscious and so unable to receive the information required by the statute to be given him⁵³ or is dead and therefore not in need of assistance⁵⁴ does not excuse the failure to stop or to comply with other provisions of the statute, and the fact that accused did not think that an injury was grave enough to require rendering assistance does not excuse a failure to stop as required by the statute.⁵⁵

The fact that no person is present to whom the statute requires that certain information shall be given excuses a failure to give such information,⁵⁶ and the fact that the person who is designated by the statute as the one to whom the information is to be given is unconscious and, therefore, unable to receive the information excuses a failure to give it.⁵⁷ So, failure to give the prescribed information by the operator of a vehicle involved in a collision may be excused by the failure of the operator of the other vehicle involved to afford a reasonable opportunity to give such information.⁵⁸ The operator of a motor vehicle is not, however, relieved from the obligation imposed by statute to stop and give to "any proper person" the information required by the fact that the person injured is unconscious and no one else is near by, where the accident takes place under such circumstances that there is every reason to believe some one will shortly appear to whom the required information can be given.⁵⁹ The fact that a driver is under arrest does not necessarily excuse his failure to give to a police officer the information required by the statute,⁶⁰ or his failure to make a report of the accident to a specified state department as required by statute,⁶¹ and the fact that the injured person has been guilty of negligence does not excuse the failure to perform a statutory duty.⁶²

to take him to a physician or surgeon for treatment if such treatment is required or if it is requested by the injured person, the driver should be acquitted if under all circumstances it did not reasonably appear to him to be necessary to take the injured person for such treatment, unless he was requested by such person to be so taken, and declined,⁶³ and no guilt attaches to a refusal of such a request made in bad faith by one who is uninjured.⁶⁴ It has been held that the fact that a driver of a vehicle took steps to obtain assistance for an injured guest in such vehicle may excuse such driver's failure to stop and render assistance to the injured occupant of another vehicle with which such driver's vehicle collided.⁶⁵ It has been held, however, that the fact that a person drives on without stopping in order to obtain assistance for the injured person does not excuse a failure to comply with the statutory requirement to stop and to render assistance,⁶⁶ and that the facts that the person who is charged with the duty to render assistance instructs another to render assistance and does not leave the scene of the accident until he receives the assurance of such other that the injured person is dead do not excuse noncompliance.⁶⁷ The belief that an injured person is dead does not necessarily excuse a failure to comply with a statutory requirement to take an injured person to a physician or surgeon for medical or surgical treatment if the necessity to do so exists.⁶⁸

The alleged fear of accused that he might have been assaulted if he had stopped to comply with the statute does not excuse his failure to comply, where there was not any attempt or threat to assault him or the display of any weapon with which an assault might have been committed.⁶⁹ The desire of accused to conceal his private affairs does not excuse his failure to comply with the statute.⁷⁰

As a general rule an indictment or other charge in a prosecution under a statute penalizing a failure to stop, to give information, or to render assistance, in case of accident, collision, injury, or the like, must sufficiently allege the elements of the offense.

In accordance with the rule applicable in criminal prosecutions generally, stated in Indictments and Informations § 130, in general a charge or accusation in a prosecution under a statute of the type here under consideration should allege clearly and specifically the facts and circumstances which constitute the essential elements of the offense.⁷¹ A charge is ordinarily sufficient where it follows the language of the statute,⁷² at least where the statute sets forth with precision and certainty all the elements of the offense.⁷³ The view has been taken, however, that a charge which describes the offense in the language of the statute is not necessarily sufficient and that the description must be specific.⁷⁴

Under particular statutes it is essential to allege that the vehicle driven by accused was a motor vehicle,⁷⁵ that a motor vehicle was involved in the occurrence,⁷⁶ or that the occurrence was accidental.⁷⁷ It is essential, under some statutes, to allege that personal injury or property damage was caused by a vehicle operated by accused⁷⁸

and that such injury or damage was due to the culpability of accused or to accident.⁷⁹ A charge which fails to allege that the accident resulted in injury to any person or property other than the vehicle under control of accused or its occupants is not sufficient, where the statute defining the offense is, by its terms, confined in its operation to an accident causing such an injury.⁸⁰ It has been held that a charge which fails to name or identify the person who was injured is not sufficient.⁸¹ The view has been taken, however, that it is not essential to set forth the name of the person collided with and injured,⁸² but that, where the name of the person injured is not given, accused is entitled as of right to a statement of particulars, for the purpose of obtaining such information.⁸³ It has been held that a charge which fails to name or identify the person whose property has been damaged is not sufficient,⁸⁴ but it has also been held that a charge is sufficient after verdict, notwithstanding it fails to describe with particularity the property injured⁸⁵ or the particular injury caused to the property.⁸⁶

While, according to some cases, a charge is not necessarily fatally defective by reason of its omission to state that the injury was caused or the accident occurred on a public highway,⁸⁷ or to describe the particular point in the highway at which the accident took place,⁸⁸ it has been held that a charge which fails to show that the accident occurred on a street or highway is not sufficient in a prosecution under a statute which governs the use of vehicles on public highways⁸⁹ or which expressly relates to an accident or collision on a highway or street.⁹⁰ In a prosecution under a statute which is not confined in its operation to public highways, however, failure to allege that accused was driving on a public highway does not render the charge insufficient.⁹¹

Under some circumstances certain allegations may be disregarded as surplusage in reaching the conclusion that the charge is sufficient.⁹²

Knowledge. Where the knowledge in question is not expressly made a part of the statutory definition of the offense, according to some cases a charge need not allege knowledge on the part of accused that he had had or had caused an accident⁹³ or that with knowledge of the accident he failed to stop.⁹⁴ On the other hand, where knowledge is expressly included as an element of the offense, it is essential to allege such knowledge.⁹⁵ It has been held that an allegation that the vehicle driven by accused collided with another vehicle and that accused willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and knowingly failed to stop is a sufficient allegation of accused's knowledge of the collision,⁹⁶ and that an allegation that accused willfully and unlawfully drove a vehicle and failed immediately to stop such vehicle involved in an accident causing injuries and death to another person and to render the required aid,⁹⁷ or an allegation that accused's vehicle was involved in an accident causing injuries and death to another person and that accused willfully failed immediately to stop such vehicle and willfully neglected to render the required aid,⁹⁸ is a sufficient allegation of accused's knowledge that he had injured or killed another person; but a somewhat stricter rule has apparently been recognized as to the sufficiency of an allegation as to knowledge where knowledge of a particular fact is expressly made an element of the offense by the statute.⁹⁹

It has been held that, in a prosecution for aiding and abetting in the violation of the statute, failure to allege that accused knew that another person was guilty of a violation of the statute does not render the charge insufficient.¹

Failure to stop. In a prosecution under a statute requiring that a driver shall immediately stop under certain circumstances, an allegation that accused unlawfully and feloniously failed to stop is sufficient notwithstanding the omission of the word "immediately" from the allegation,² and an allegation, substantially in the words of the statute, that accused failed immediately to stop is not insufficient on the ground that such allegation permits the inference that accused may have stopped within a reasonable time.³

Failure to give information. In general, where failure to give the information required by the statute is the basis of the charge, the allegations should show that some person to whom under the terms of the statute the information is to be given was present and able to receive the information.⁴ It has been held, however, in a prosecution under a statute providing for giving information to a person who is with the injured person, that failure to

(1) In upholding a complaint charging a driver with failure "to stop to render aid" where a vehicle struck and injured a dog, it was stated that the words "to render aid" could be disregarded, where the prosecution was under a statute which required a driver to stop when he struck and injured a dog but which did not require him to render aid in such case.—People v. Fimbres, 288 P. 19, 109 Cal.App. 778.

(2) An allegation that accused failed to stop constituted a sufficient allegation of the violation of the statute and all further allegations as to failure to render assistance could be treated as surplusage.—Morgan v. State, 167 S.W.2d 765, 145 Tex.Cr. 276.

allege the name of the person who was with the injured person is not a fatal defect where the charge negatives any attempt to comply with the statute.⁵ Where the requirement is that the driver stop and give his name, license number, and the like, if requested to give such information, a complaint which alleges failure to stop is not defective for an omission to charge that accused did not give such information, since he was under no duty to do so unless demand therefor had been made,⁶ and, in a prosecution for failing to stop and render assistance, it is not essential to allege that a request for information was made under a provision of the statute for giving information if requested.⁷ Notwithstanding the statute provides for furnishing information on request, the mere failure to allege a request in a charge for failure to stop and to give information does not render the charge insufficient, since a failure to stop renders it impossible to make the request.⁸

Failure to render assistance. Where the statute requires that a driver of a motor vehicle stop after having caused an accident, and render all necessary assistance, including taking the injured person to a physician or surgeon for treatment if necessary or if requested so to do, an indictment which charges failure to stop is not defective because it does not allege that the injured person needed assistance⁹ or needed or requested medical treatment.¹⁰

Issues, proof, and variance. It is essential to prove knowledge on the part of accused of an accident, collision, injury to person or property, or like occurrence where such occurrence is essential to render the statute operative.¹¹ Under some statutes proof of knowledge on the part of accused that he collided with another vehicle or property is sufficient without proof that he knew that injury had otherwise resulted to a person or property.¹² Evidence of the general good character of accused for being a competent and careful driver is not admissible where the only issue is whether accused was the driver of a vehicle which collided with another vehicle.¹³

It has been held that a charge alleging that the automobile struck a named person and proof that it struck the automobile in which such person was riding presents no variance,¹⁴ but it has also been held that there is a fatal variance where the charge alleges that the vehicle driven by accused struck and collided with a named person and the proof merely shows that the vehicle so driven collided with the vehicles in which such person was driving.¹⁵ There is not a fatal variance where the charge alleges that an accident occurred on a public highway and the proof shows that the body of a person who was struck by a vehicle was found on a named "road," where such road was open to the public for vehicular traffic.¹⁶

- a. Presumptions and burden of proof
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

The prosecution has the burden to prove the guilt of accused, in other words, to prove the existence of the elements of the offense.

In accordance with rules applicable in criminal prosecutions generally, the prosecution has the burden to establish the guilt of accused,¹⁷ that is, to prove the elements of the offense.¹⁸ It seems,

Fact of injury

The prosecution had the burden to prove that a person was injured by a motor vehicle.—People v. Hakala, supra.

Operation or control by accused

The prosecution had the burden to prove:

(1) That accused was either driving, or was in control of, a vehicle involved.—Hunter v. State, 139 S.W.2d 89, 139 Tex.Cr. 106—Freeman v. State, 40 S.W.2d 105, 118 Tex.Cr. 102.

(2) That accused was the operator of a vehicle that caused an injury to a person.—People v. Hakala, 61 N.Y.S.2d 718, 270 App.Div. 612.

(3) That accused was operating a vehicle that was involved in an accident resulting in injury to a person.—Commonwealth v. Adams, 23 A.2d 59, 146 Pa.Super. 601.

Knowledge

The prosecution had the burden to prove that accused knew that:

however, that where the statute designates several persons or officers to whom in the alternative an accident is to be reported, an accident having been shown, the onus probandi rests on the driver to show that he reported the accident as required by statute, and not on the state to show that he did not comply with each of the alternative requirements.¹⁹

b. Admissibility

The admissibility of evidence in prosecutions for neglecting a duty after an accident is governed by the usual rules of evidence in criminal cases.

(1) A collision had occurred.—State v. Lee, 88 P.2d 996, 53 Ariz. 295.

(2) He was involved in an accident resulting in an injury to a person.—Commonwealth v. Adams, 23 A.2d 59, 146 Pa.Super. 601.

(3) An injury to a person had been caused which was due to his culpability or to accident.—People v. Hakala, 61 N.Y.S.2d 718, 270 App.Div. 612.

(4) Damage had been caused to property.—People, on Complaint of Matus, v. Dropkin, 25 N.Y.S.2d 16, 261 App.Div. 223—People v. Ericson, 5 N.Y.S.2d 286, 168 Misc. 51.

Failure to render necessary assistance

The prosecution had the burden to prove that accused failed to render reasonable assistance which he must have seen was necessary.—Commonwealth v. Adams, 23 A.2d 59, 146 Pa.Super. 601.

Statute not requiring knowledge

In a prosecution under a statute which did not in terms require knowledge of the accident, it was stated that in most cases it would be impossible for the state to prove scienter beyond a reasonable doubt.—State v. Masters, 144 S.E. 718, 106 W.Va. 46.

establish elements of the offense and the guilt of accused.²⁴ So, while knowledge may be shown by direct proof,²⁵ positive and direct proof is not essential,²⁶ and circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to show knowledge.²⁷ In order to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence, however, the facts and circumstances shown must be consistent with each other, consistent with the hypothesis that accused is guilty, and inconsistent with the hypothesis that he is innocent.²⁸ A strong suspicion that accused knew that he had injured a person or had damaged the property of another is not sufficient with respect to proof of knowledge.²⁹ Evidence of absence of recent dents or marks on the vehicle driven by accused does not necessarily constitute conclusive proof that accused did not injure a person.³⁰

§ 679. — Questions of Law and Fact

Where the evidence as to an issue is conflicting or is such as to permit the drawing of different conclusions therefrom, in general whether the accused is guilty or whether particular elements of the offense exist is a question of fact for the jury or other trier of the facts.

The absence of recent dents or marks on defendant's automobile was not conclusive proof that he did not inflict injuries described on body of deceased pedestrian in light of testimony of automobile salesman, on cross-examination by commonwealth, that whether striking a man would leave any dents or marks on automobile would depend on manner in which man was struck.—Blankenship v. Commonwealth, 35 S.E.2d 760, 184 Va. 495.

ing of different conclusions therefrom, whether accused is guilty of an offense with respect to neglecting a statutory duty after an accident is a question of fact for the jury or other trier of the facts,³¹ and a like rule applies with respect to the existence of particular elements of the offense,³² such as whether accused knew that an accident had occurred or that a person or property had been struck, injured, or damaged.³³ Accused is not entitled to a directed verdict in his favor or to a dismissal of the prosecution because of the alleged insufficiency of evidence, where the evidence is sufficient to present a question of fact as to the particular issue or question.³⁴ It has been held, however, that accused is entitled to a dismissal of the prosecution on a judgment of nonsuit, where evidence to prove an essential element of the offense is lacking,³⁵ and a demurrer to the evidence should be sustained where the evidence is clearly insufficient to show that accused is guilty.³⁶

The instructions in a prosecution for neglect of a statutory duty after an accident should fully and correctly state the rules of law applicable to the case.

The instructions should contain a correct statement of law as to matters involved in the particular case,³⁷ and it is proper to refuse to give a requested instruction which does not constitute a correct statement of law.³⁸ An instruction should not be broader than the allegations charging the offense,³⁹ and should not ignore excuses for performing the acts.⁴⁰ Instructions should be confined and limited to the issues⁴¹ and to matters of which there is proof,⁴² should properly apply

(1) Accused is entitled to an instruction setting forth affirmatively matters which constitute a defense to the action where there is evidence to support such matters.—Woods v. State, 121 S.W.2d 604, 135 Tex.Cr. 540

the law to the facts,⁴³ and should limit the jury to the consideration of issues presented by the evidence.⁴⁴ An instruction that the jury must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that accused was driving the motor vehicle in question at the time of the accident is properly refused where the evidence of such fact is undisputed.⁴⁵ In a prosecution for failure to render assistance, it is improper to give an instruction submitting to the jury issues as to the speed, or manner and effect of operation, of accused's vehicle.⁴⁶

Where a failure to perform any one of the several acts designated by the statute constitutes a separate offense, and the count charging guilt sets forth separate offenses under the statute, generally it is essential to instruct the jury that they must agree as to at least one of the alternative charges or separate offenses in order to find accused guilty,⁴⁷ but it is not essential under all circumstances to distinguish between the separate offenses under the statute.⁴⁸

Knowledge and intent. In view of the general rule that knowledge of the accident or of striking or injuring a person or property is an essential element of the offense or that want of such knowledge constitutes a defense to the prosecution, stated supra § 674 c (2), ordinarily accused is entitled to an instruction duly submitting to the jury this question as to knowledge,⁴⁹ or, more specifically stated, to an instruction that want of knowledge of the accident would excuse the failure to comply with the statute⁵⁰ or to an instruction which directs an acquittal if the jury entertain a reasonable doubt that he had such knowledge.⁵¹ A requested instruction as to knowledge should constitute a correct statement of law,⁵² and a request for an instruction as to knowledge is properly refused where no issue as to knowledge is raised by the evidence,⁵³ or where the evidence conclusively shows that accused would have known that he struck a person if he had not been under the influence of intoxicating liquor.⁵⁴ The mere failure to use the word "knowingly" does not render an instruction insufficient where the requirement as to knowledge is duly set forth in the instruction in other terms.⁵⁵

It is proper to refuse a requested instruction as to intent which does not constitute a correct statement of law.⁵⁶

§ 681. — Verdict and Findings

In general a verdict of guilty in a prosecution for an offense here under consideration, which is contrary to the evidence and instructions is insufficient.

In general a verdict of guilty in a prosecution for an offense here under consideration is insufficient where it is contrary to the evidence⁵⁷ and to the instructions.⁵⁸ There is not necessarily an inconsistency between a finding that accused is not guilty of an offense of the type here under consideration and a finding that accused violated the statute defining the offense of driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.⁵⁹

—Williams v. State, 102 S.W.2d 212, second case, 132 Tex.Cr. 33.

(2) Accused is not entitled to an instruction presenting a certain matter as a defense, however, where, as a witness, he did not present such matter as a reason for failure to comply with the statute and the evidence does not support such defense. —Morris v. State, 94 S.W.2d 1169, 130 Tex.Cr. 533.

Only one distinct offense charged and considered

Where only the distinct offense of failure to render assistance was charged in the indictment and considered at the trial, an instruction fairly covering the elements of such distinct offense, without reference to the other distinct offenses under the statute, was sufficient.—People v. § 682. — Judgment, Sentence, and Punishment

Local statutes govern as to the period and extent of punishment for an offense with respect to neglecting a statutory duty after an accident, and whether punishment imposed is excessive may depend on the particular facts.

The period and extent of punishment for an offense depend largely on provisions of local statutes,⁶⁰ and whether punishment imposed is excessive may depend on the particular facts.⁶¹ A statute providing for imprisonment for violation of its terms, and silent as to the place of such imprisonment, but declaring a violation to be a felony, which is defined by another statute as any offense punishable by imprisonment in the state's prison, authorizes the sentencing of a violator to the state's prison.⁶²

§ 683. — Appeal and Error

Rules governing appeals in criminal prosecutions generally apply to an appeal in a prosecution for neglecting a statutory duty after an accident.

Misdemeanor

Where the offense is a misdemeanor, the punishment imposed must not exceed that prescribed for misdemeanors.

S.D.—State v. Hanno, 238 N.W. 23, 58 S.D. 649.

Hard labor and double punishment

(1) Where the punishment was fixed at a designated term of imprisonment and no fine was imposed, it was not permissible to impose an additional period at hard labor on accused to pay the costs of the proceedings.—Mills v. State, 191 So. 922, 29 Ala.App. 106.

(2) Under a statute permitting imprisonment in the county or municipal jail for not less than a specified period and not more than a specified period, or for imprisonment in the state prison for not less than a specified period and not more than a specified period, or for a fine of not less than a specified amount and not more than a specified amount, it was not permissible to sentence accused to the state's prison and also to hard labor for the county for a sufficient period to pay a fine assessed by the jury and the costs of the proceeding.—Bragan v. State, 9 So.2d 123, 243 Ala. 102, answer to certified question conformed to 9 So. 2d 126, 30 Ala.App. 548—Bragan v. State, 9 So.2d 126, 30 Ala.App. 548.

In Pennsylvania

(1) The view has been taken that, even since the amendment of 1937, 75 P.S. § 634, a person is subject to the punishment imposed by the statute for a misdemeanor where he fails to stop after his vehicle has collided with, and has damaged property, whether the property damaged was attended or unattended.—Commonwealth v. Baker, 53 Pa.Dist. & Co. 702, 61 Montg.Co. 200—Commonwealth v. Wolfendale, 43 Pa.Dist. & Co. 230.

(2) There is also authority for the view, however, that, where in such case of failure to stop the damaged property was unattended, only the punishment prescribed by the statute for a summary offense can be imposed.—Commonwealth v. Krivonak, 46 Pa.Dist. & Co. 109, 24 Erie Co. 185—Commonwealth v. Kane, 38 Pa. Dist. & Co. 480.

§ 684. Obstructing or Blockading Highway

Statutes and ordinances making it an offense to obstruct or block the highways or streets may be violated by the operator of a motor vehicle.

Statutes and ordinances have been enacted in some jurisdictions making it an offense to obstruct or block the highways or streets, and such statutes may be violated by the operator of a motor vehicle.⁶⁶ No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what in every case will constitute an obstruction of a street or highway by an automobile,⁶⁷ but merely stopping temporarily and for a reasonable time does not violate such statutes.⁶⁸

It is an offense under some statutes or ordinances to operate on the highways or streets a motor vehicle which has a weight in excess of a prescribed maximum.

It is an offense under some statutes or ordinances to operate on the highways or streets a motor vehicle which has a weight in excess of a prescribed maximum,⁶⁹ and such statutes or ordinances have usually been held valid and enforceable.⁷⁰ While such a statute is to be strictly con-

strued⁷¹ since it is penal in nature,⁷² it is not to be given its narrowest meaning, if such is directly contrary to the intention of the legislature⁷³ or out of harmony with its manifest purpose and intent.⁷⁴

An indictment, information, or complaint under such statutes must allege every fact necessary to constitute the offense charged and to bring accused within the statutory provisions.⁷⁵ The rules that Harden, 179 N.Y.S. 732, 110 Misc. 72.

(2) The parking of automobiles in a city street for purpose of demonstration and sale was not a violation of statute prohibiting obstruction of streets by fences, buildings, structures, or otherwise.—Fry v. State, 9 N.E.2d 701, 55 Ohio App. 264.

Purpose

The purpose of statute prohibiting the use of public highways by motor vehicles of excessive weight is to prevent injury to the public property in the form of damage to roads, bridges, etc., and to insure the safety of persons traveling over the highways.—Commonwealth v. Burali, 22 A.2d 619, 146 Pa. Super. 525.

Persons liable

(1) Statutory regulations as to weight of motor vehicles generally have been held inapplicable to certificated vehicles of private contract carriers.—Dickinson v. Cahoon, 144 So. 345, 107 Fla. 155.

(2) Truck operators from other states are required to comply with such a statute.—Commonwealth v. Peacock, 179 A. 907, 118 Pa. Super. 168.—Commonwealth v. Reed, Pa. Quar. Sess., 51 York Leg. Rec. 73.

(3) In order to convict the owner of such an offense, where a truck is operated by an employee, it must appear that the owner had knowledge of the excess weight or took part in loading the vehicle or was on or about it when it was being loaded or was in operation.—Commonwealth v. Bloom, 30 Pa. Dist. 648.

Defenses

(1) Defendant's lack of knowledge that motor vehicle was overloaded is not defense and should not be considered in determining whether defendant was guilty of driving overloaded vehicle.—Snyder v. State, 185 N.E. 507, 204 Ind. 666.

(2) Fact that operator of truck charged with violation of statute complied with the laws of another state was held not to preclude conviction.—Commonwealth v. Peacock, 179 A. 907, 118 Pa. Super. 168.—Commonwealth v. Reed, Pa. Quar. Sess., 51 York Leg. Rec. 73.

(3) Fact that prosecutor of operator of truck alleged to have violated statute may not have been actuated in making complaint solely by desire to enforce the law and protect the roads would not preclude conviction if evidence clearly established defendant's guilt.—Commonwealth v. Peacock, 179 A. 907, 118 Pa. Super. 168.

(4) Filing of application as interstate motor carrier under Federal Motor Carrier Act did not exempt applicant's truck driver from liability for violation of statute penalizing driving of truck on highway with excessive load.—Morrison v. State, 109 S.W.2d 205, 133 Tex. Cr. 141, followed in Smithhart v. State, 109 S.W.2d 207, 133 Tex. Cr. 145, and Johnson v. State, 109 S.W.2d 207, 133 Tex. Cr. 144.

Exercise of power by local authorities

Statute granting local authorities power to prohibit by appropriate signs commercial vehicles exceeding certain weights is complied with when the signs are of legal size, if fixed by law, otherwise of reasonably adequate size, are posted conspicuously at points along highways and at intersections with other highways, wherever necessary, without a special reference to the authority creating the prohibition, or the ordinance, resolution, or rule under which it was adopted.—Commonwealth ex rel. It is an offense under some statutes to permit an unauthorized person to operate a motor vehicle.

It is an offense under some statutes to permit the operation of a motor vehicle by an unauthorized person.⁸⁶ Under a statute making it an offense to permit a person under sixteen years of age to operate a motor vehicle, a conviction cannot be sustained by proof that a father permitted his eleven-year-old son to hold the steering wheel while the father retained control of the car and was operating it.⁸⁷ Under such a statute it is the permission given to the minor to operate the vehicle which constitutes the offense and not the manner in which the minor operates it.⁸⁸ Although it is an offense to turn back into the road within a specified distance after passing a vehicle, there can be no conviction of such offense under a charge of permitting a minor to operate a motor vehicle, although it is charged that the minor did so turn back into the road.⁸⁹

ments: (1) The fact of possession of a motor vehicle with the distinguishing numbers or marks of identification removed, effaced, changed, covered, or destroyed.⁹⁶ (2) That such distinguishing numbers or marks of identification were changed or destroyed for the purpose of concealing or destroying the identity of the vehicle.⁹⁷ The fact that the statute permits special numbers to be stamped on the engine by permission of the secretary of state does not relieve the possessor of the motor vehicle of the statutory penalty where the original number was destroyed or altered without securing the required permission.⁹⁸ It is no defense to one who is prosecuted for the offense of having in his possession an automobile with the motor and number so mutilated that he was merely driving it temporarily at the request of one with whom he had been riding, but who ran away on the approach of officers.⁹⁹

Complaint, information, or indictment. An indictment or information under such statutes must set forth and charge all the facts required by the statute to establish the offense and to bring accused within the statutory provisions.¹ An indictment which substantially follows the language of the statute is usually sufficient.² The indictment should describe the motor vehicle with sufficient certainty to identify the subject matter of the offense charged.³ It is not necessary to charge scienter in an information charging accused with having in his possession unlawfully a motor vehicle with a changed engine number.⁴

Evidence. In a prosecution for having possession of a motor vehicle with its numbers or identification marks changed, removed or defaced, it is incumbent on the state to sustain every element of the offense charged by satisfactory proof beyond a reasonable doubt.⁵ Evidence is admissible in accordance with the usual rules of evidence in criminal cases.⁶ In a prosecution for possessing an automobile the motor and serial numbers of which had been mutilated, an officer may testify that just prior to the arrest of accused he tried to drive the automobile past him, and that the officer pulled his own car in front of accused's car and that the latter struck the officer's car and burst a tire.⁷ Accused may be asked on his cross-examination, in order to affect his credibility, whether he had not represented himself as a person of a different name, and had not stated that he had a car to sell, which afterward proved to have been stolen.⁸ The sufficiency of the evidence required to sustain a conviction is tested by the rules applicable in criminal cases generally.⁹

§ 689. Selling or Transferring without Compliance with Regulations

The sale or transfer of motor vehicles without complying with the statutory regulations relating to such sale or transfer is made an offense under some statutes.

The sale or transfer of motor vehicles without complying with the statutory regulations relating to such sale or transfer is made an offense under some statutes.¹⁰ Under a statute making it an offense to transfer a used automobile without complying with the regulations prescribed, one who purchases the car in good faith, in reliance on representations that it is a new, and not a second-hand, car, is not guilty of the offense.¹¹

§ 691. Taking and Using Motor Vehicle without Consent

- a. In general
- b. Elements of offense

a. In General

Under some statutes it is an offense for a person to take and use or operate the motor vehicle of another without the consent of the owner or custodian.

Under some statutes it is an offense for a person to take and use or operate the motor vehicle of another without consent of the owner¹³ or custodian,¹⁴ or voluntarily to ride in or upon such motor vehicle with knowledge of the fact that it was unlawfully taken.¹⁵

Grade of offense. Under some statutes the offense of unlawfully taking and using a motor vehicle is a misdemeanor,¹⁶ but other statutes denounce the crime as a felony¹⁷ even as to those who voluntarily ride in the motor vehicle with knowledge that it was unlawfully taken.¹⁸ In some jurisdictions, however, the offense may constitute a felony or a misdemeanor,¹⁹ depending on whether or not accused had color of authority in using the car.²⁰ Under other statutes a first offense is a misdemeanor but second or subsequent offenses are declared felonies.²¹

b. Elements of Offense

- (1) Taking and using without consent
- (2) Riding with knowledge of unlawful taking

(1) Taking and Using without Consent

The essential elements of the offense of taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner depend on the terms of the particular statute creating the offense.

The essential elements of the offense of taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner depend on the terms of the particular statute creating the offense.²² Under some of the statutes it is an essential element of the offense not only that the motor vehicle be taken or driven away, but that it be driven or operated upon a street or highway of the state,²³ and in the ab-

(1) It is a felony for any person to take or drive a vehicle without the consent and in the absence of the owner with intent to deprive the owner, either permanently or temporarily, of his title or possession, whether with or without intent to steal such vehicle.—People v. (2) It is a misdemeanor for any person to take an automobile without the permission of the owner for the purpose of temporarily using or operating such automobile.—People v. Gherna, supra—People v. Bailey, supra.

(3) It has been held that if these statutes are in irreconcilable conflict, the felony statute must prevail over the previously adopted misdemeanor statute.—People v. Orona, 164 P.2d 769, 72 Cal.App.2d 478.

(4) It has also been held that the misdemeanor statute has not been impliedly repealed by the felony statute.—People v. Bailey, supra.

Manner of operation

Under some statutes the vehicle or automobile taken must be operated by electricity, steam, or explosive power in order to constitute an offense.—People v. State, supra.

sence of the owner.²⁴ Although a statute which prohibits the unlawful taking and operation of a motor vehicle without consent declares the offense to be grand larceny and punishable as such, it does not make the value of the vehicle taken material²⁵ or make it necessary in order to commit the offense that the value of the vehicle be such as to bring it within the requirement of the general statute pertaining to grand larceny.²⁶

Taking. In order to constitute a taking under a statute there must be an asportation,²⁷ but any removal, however slight, of a vehicle may be sufficient.²⁸ Under a statute which makes it an offense for any person to "take possession of and drive or take away" the motor vehicle of another without authority, taking possession constitutes an essential element of the crime²⁹ which must precede the unauthorized driving or taking away.³⁰ Hence, it has been held there is no offense under such a statute where the possession of the vehicle is with the consent of the owner although it is operated without his consent.³¹ Similarly, where a statute prohibits any person from taking and operating or driving a motor vehicle without the owner's consent, it is held not to apply where accused, who operated the car without, or in excess of, his authority, had secured possession of the machine with the owner's consent,³² although such consent was obtained by misrepresentation or for a fraudulent purpose.³³ Of course, where the statutory offense consists merely in the operation of a vehicle without consent, the manner of securing possession is immaterial.³⁴

authority, it has been held that the word "use" includes use by a passenger,³⁵ and that it is not necessary to constitute such use within the meaning of the statute that there be active control or operation of the vehicle by one who rides therein.³⁶ However, it is a necessary element of the offense, under a statute prohibiting any person without authority to take possession of and drive or take away a motor vehicle belonging to another, that the taking of possession be followed by a driving or taking away,³⁷ but it has been held that merely pushing a vehicle across the road is not such an unlawful use as to support a conviction for using or attempting to use a motor vehicle without the owner's permission.³⁸

Nonconsent of owner. It is essential to the commission of the offense of unlawful taking and using another's motor vehicle that it be without the authority or consent of the owner.³⁹ In some jurisdictions it has been held that the owner's nonconsent must precede the act of taking, or assuming possession, of the motor vehicle and does not relate to what transpires thereafter,⁴⁰ and hence the taking of possession of the vehicle, as well as the driving or operation, must be unauthorized.⁴¹ Consent within the meaning of the statute implies authority to drive another's car, and requires the sanction on the part of the owner, or person in charge of the car, to another to drive it,⁴² but the fact that the consent of the owner was obtained by misrepresentation or for a fraudulent purpose will not constitute such a taking without consent as is contemplated by the statute.⁴³ The consent of the owner to the use of his car may be implied,⁴⁴ but such permission cannot be inferred from the fact that accused had been, at other times, allowed to operate the car.⁴⁵

The word "owner" in such a statute has been construed,⁴⁶ and the fact that the statute only forbids the taking or using "without the owner's consent" does not confine the meaning of the word "owner" to the real or actual owner but includes one who has possession as a bailee or other lawful custodian,⁴⁷ such as the keeper of the garage where the car in question is stored.⁴⁸

Intent. As distinguished from larceny, it is not essential to the commission of the offense of "unlawful taking and using" as defined by the statutes that there be a felonious intent to deprive the owner permanently of his property,⁴⁹ but the character of taking contemplated is temporary,⁵⁰ the word "take" not being used as meaning "steal" or in the sense of a theft.⁵¹ Under some statutes, however, the unauthorized acts of taking of possession and operation of another's motor vehicle must be done willfully or willfully and wantonly⁵² or intentionally.⁵³ Under other statutes a wrongful intent is not an essential element of the offense and the act is criminal irrespective of the intent⁵⁴ or the purpose of accused in using the automobile.⁵⁵

Under the construction given the statutes in some jurisdictions, it has been held that whoever uses a motor vehicle must actually be authorized to do so if he is to stand guiltless, a mere belief, however honest, in the authority of the person in control, being no defense in the absence of authorization by the owner, or by one who in law possesses the right of control ordinarily vested in the owner,⁵⁶ and hence a mere passive invited guest who rides in the vehicle may be convicted of the offense, although innocent of guilty intent and ignorant of the lack of authority to use the vehicle on the part of the person in control.⁵⁷ In other jurisdictions, however, it has been held that a person laboring under an honest mistake that he had the right to take and use the vehicle,⁵⁸ or a person who, in good faith, believed that he was the owner of it,⁵⁹ or who merely rode in the vehicle with another believing the latter was the owner or had a right to use it,⁶⁰ would not be guilty of an unlawful taking and using within the meaning of the statute.

(2) Riding with Knowledge of Unlawful Taking

Under a statute making it an offense for any person to ride in or upon a motor vehicle with knowledge of the fact that it was unlawfully taken, there must be a combination of the elements in order to constitute the offense.

Under a statute making it an offense for any person voluntarily to ride in or upon a motor vehicle with knowledge of the fact that it was unlawfully taken, there must be a combination of these elements in order to constitute the offense.⁶¹ It is essential: (1) That the motor vehicle shall have been intentionally taken by someone without permission of the owner.⁶² (2) That accused voluntarily rode in or upon the automobile.⁶³ (3) That at the time of riding in or upon the automobile accused did so with knowledge of the fact that it had been unlawfully taken.⁶⁴ The knowledge required by the statute is not actual knowledge such as is acquired by personal observation of the taking,

but it is sufficient if the circumstances were such as to make accused believe at any time during the ride in the motor vehicle that it was unlawfully taken.⁶⁵

In some jurisdictions the offense of taking and using the motor vehicle of another without authority extends to and includes one who may have a general or special relation to the owner, such as a servant or bailee.

In some jurisdictions, either because of judicial construction⁶⁶ or by virtue of an express statutory provision,⁶⁷ the offense of taking and using the motor vehicle of another without authority is not restricted to the taking and operation of a motor vehicle by one who has no relation whatever to the owner,⁶⁸ but extends to and includes one who may have a general relation or a special relation to the owner, such as a servant or bailee.⁶⁹ In other words, an employee,⁷⁰ such as a chauffeur employed to operate a motor vehicle,⁷¹ or a garage manager or a garage employee engaged to care for or repair a motor vehicle,⁷² may be convicted of the offense; but where the particular statutory provision makes the unlawful taking of possession an element of the offense, as discussed supra § 691, one who has lawful possession of the automobile as a bailee or other lawful custodian, such as a garage keeper, cannot be convicted under such statute for the act of driving the car without authority while so having possession.⁷³

An assignee of a conditional sale contract covering a motor vehicle has been held not guilty of the offense where he takes possession of such motor vehicle after the purchaser's default.⁷⁴

Principals and accessories. Where the offense is a misdemeanor, one who is present and aids or abets in the unlawful taking and using is an accomplice⁷⁵ and as such is liable, and may be prosecuted and convicted, as a principal in the case.⁷⁶ It is not essential that such a person actually operate the car himself; it is sufficient if he procured another to run or operate it.⁷⁷ Similarly, where the statute makes it a felony willfully and without authority to take possession of and drive away the automobile of another or to assist in and be a party to such taking possession and driving away, such an accomplice may be prosecuted and convicted as for the commission of a felony,⁷⁸ even though he does not physically participate in the unlawful taking.⁷⁹

§ 693. — Indictment

An indictment, information, or complaint for taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner must set forth, with sufficient certainty, all the facts necessary to constitute the offense.

Grade of offense

In order to charge taking of automobile as misdemeanor, it should be made clear that misdemeanor and not felony had been committed by charging that there was a taking, without owner's consent, either in his presence or with purpose of temporarily using or operating vehicle but not intent to deprive owner of his title to, or possession of, automobile.—People v. makes it an element of the offense, it must be charged that the vehicle was operated by electricity, steam, or explosive power,⁸² that the vehicle was driven or operated upon a street or highway of the state,⁸³ and that it was driven or operated in the absence of the owner⁸⁴ and without his consent.⁸⁵ An indictment or information must describe the motor vehicle⁸⁶ and allege the ownership thereof.⁸⁷

Issues, proof, and variance. The rule that a material variance between the allegations of the indictment or information and the proof is fatal applies to prosecutions for taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner.⁸⁸

§ 694. — Evidence

- a. Presumptions and burden of proof
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

General rules apply as to presumptions and burden of proof in a prosecution for taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner.

The general rules governing criminal cases as to the burden of proof⁸⁹ and presumptions⁹⁰ apply in a prosecution for taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner. The prosecution must prove all the essential elements of the offense.⁹¹ Thus it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove an intent to deprive an owner, either permanently or temporarily, of his title to, or possession of, a vehicle where this is an element of the offense.⁹²

b. Admissibility

The rules regulating the admission of evidence in criminal cases generally govern as to the admissibility of evidence in a prosecution for taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner.

The rules regulating the admission of evidence in criminal cases generally govern as to the admissibility of evidence to prove or disprove the commission of the offense of taking and using a motor vehicle without the owner's consent.⁹³ Such rules have been applied with reference to admissibility of evidence of the conduct of accused after commission of the offense,⁹⁴ as to the competency of testimony based on a refreshed recollection,⁹⁵ and the eliciting of testimony tending to incriminate⁹⁶ or impeach⁹⁷ a witness. Defendants in aid of their plea of not guilty and in order to rebut the theory of the prosecution may introduce any evidence that might logically relate to the question of guilty knowledge.⁹⁸ The motive for the commission of the crime may be shown as a circumstance tending to show guilt, and the absence of motive or reason for the commission of the alleged offense may be considered as a circumstance favorable to accused.⁹⁹

c. Weight and Sufficiency

The rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in criminal cases apply in a prosecution for taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner.

As to taking

It has been said that the possession of stolen property by defendant under circumstances that would raise a presumption that defendant stole the property, if the charge was larceny, would raise a like presumption, as to the unlawful taking, when the charge was under a statute prohibiting the taking and using of a motor vehicle without consent of the owner.—Rokvic v. in determining whether the evidence in a prosecution for taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner is sufficient to sustain a conviction.¹ The general rules also apply with respect to the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the essential elements of the offense,² the connection of accused with the offense,³ ownership of the motor vehicle,⁴ and other matters.⁵ Circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to support a conviction,⁶ and accused's failure to explain his possession of the motor vehicle is a circumstance which may be considered.⁷

Intent. Where intent is an essential element of the offense, it may be established by circumstantial evidence,⁸ but there must be substantial evidence from which it may be reasonably determined.⁹

§ 695. — Questions of Law and Fact

In a prosecution for taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner it is ordinarily the province of the jury to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused.

In accordance with the rule applicable in criminal prosecutions generally, in a prosecution for taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner, it is ordinarily the province of the jury to determine questions of fact,¹⁰ such as the guilt or innocence of accused, provided the evidence is sufficient to authorize the submission of the issue to them.¹¹ Where there is sufficient evidence to sustain a verdict of guilty, it is proper for the court to refuse to direct a verdict for accused.¹²

In accordance with general rules, in a prosecution for taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner, the court should give full and accurate instructions to the jury.

In accordance with general rules, in a prosecution for taking and using a motor vehicle without consent of the owner, the court should give full and accurate instructions applicable to the case,¹³ and it is proper, where accused alleged that he had authority for his acts, for the court to charge also on the question whether he retained the motor vehicle for an unreasonable time, if it was lawfully taken.¹⁴ Instructions which are unnecessary or misleading should not be given,¹⁵ but the charge should be judged as a whole, and not by some incidental statement which, taken by itself, might be misleading.¹⁶ Requested instructions, which do not correctly state the law,¹⁷ or which are inapplicable,¹⁸ or which are fully covered by other instructions given by the court¹⁹ are properly refused.

§ 697. — Verdict and Findings

General rules apply with respect to a verdict in a prosecution for taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner.

The rules which govern in criminal prosecutions generally apply with respect to a verdict in a prosecution for taking and using a motor vehicle without the consent of the owner.²⁰ Where two defendants are tried jointly for unlawful taking and using a motor vehicle, the jury may return a verdict that the two defendants are not guilty, that one or the other of the defendants is guilty, or that both of defendants are guilty.²¹ A statutory provision authorizing the court to order special findings in connection with the general verdict has been held not applicable to prosecutions for unlawfully taking and using a motor vehicle.²²

§ 698. — Judgment, Sentence, and Punishment

The penalty or punishment to be imposed for the unlawful taking and use of another's motor vehicle without consent is usually prescribed by the statute creating the offense.

The penalty or punishment to be imposed for a violation of a statute prohibiting the unlawful taking and use of another's motor vehicle without consent is usually prescribed by the statute creating the offense.²³ Where, however, such a statute prescribes no penalty, but declares the offense a felony, the punishment will be governed by the general provisions of the penal code pertaining to the punishment for felonies.²⁴ A penalty or punishment imposed by the sentence of the court which is excessive or unauthorized cannot be enforced.²⁵

§ 699. — Appeal and Error

Review of a conviction for unlawfully taking and using a motor vehicle is governed by the rules and statutes applicable to a review in criminal prosecutions generally.

Matters relating to a review by a higher court of a conviction for unlawfully taking and using a motor vehicle are governed by the rules and statutes applicable to a review in criminal prosecutions generally. These rules have been applied to such matters as the questions which may be originally raised on appeal or writ of error,²⁶ the presumptions or inferences indulged by the reviewing court,²⁷ and as to the assignments of error to be considered.²⁸

Harmless error. A judgment of conviction will not be reversed for error which was not harmful or prejudicial to any substantial rights of accused.²⁹

and where there was ample evidence on which the jury might find a verdict of guilty.³⁰

Determination and disposition of cause. A conviction for unlawfully taking and using an automobile without the consent of the owner on an information which does not allege all the facts necessary to constitute the crime with which accused is charged³¹ or which does not set forth such facts with sufficiency certainty³² will be reversed on appeal. However, it has been held that, where the defect in an information, which was not questioned as to sufficiency in the trial court, could have been remedied by an amendment, the reviewing court on a writ of error will remand the cause for an opportunity to amend.³³ So, where the judgment of conviction is erroneous only as to sentence imposed, it will be affirmed and remanded for proper sentence.³⁴

§ 700. Taking Accessories

Under some statutes it is a felony unlawfully and without consent of the owner to take any accessory or appurtenance contained in, on, or forming part of, any motor vehicle amounting in value to more than a specified sum.

Under some statutes it is an offense, amounting to a felony,³⁵ unlawfully and without consent of the owner to take any accessory or appurtenance contained in, on, or forming a part of, any motor vehicle amounting in value to more than a specified sum.³⁶ The nature of the offense is substantially the same as that of taking and using a motor vehicle without consent of the owner and it is sometimes created by the same statutory provisions.³⁷ The offense is not larceny or the equivalent thereof, but is a distinct crime,³⁸ in the commission of which it is not material whether or not accused had the intention to deprive the owner of his property.³⁹ Hence, it is not a necessary element of the offense that the property be feloniously stolen,⁴⁰ although it is essential that it be taken without the owner's consent.⁴¹

Presumption arising from possession

The possession of stolen property by defendant under circumstances that would raise a presumption that defendant stole the property where the charge was larceny raises a similar presumption, as to the unlawful taking, in a prosecution for unlawfully taking automobile accessories without the owner's consent.—Rokvic v. State, 143 N.E. 357, 194 Ind. 450.

Grade of offense

(1) A violation is misdemeanor under some statutes.

U.S.—Trinity Universal Ins. Co. v. Cunningham, C.C.A.Mo., 107 F.2d 857, certiorari dismissed 60 S.Ct. 1074, 310 U.S. 654, 84 L.Ed. 1419.
Mich.—People v. Carr, 203 N.W. 948, 231 Mich. 246.

(2) It has been held that although no penalty is provided in the statute, the offense is a misdemeanor and punishable as such under a general statute applicable in cases where the performance of an act is prohibited by a statute which imposes no penalty for its violation.—People ex rel. Weatherwax v. Watt, 188 N.Y.S. 559, strictly construed,⁴³ and no intendments, beyond such as necessarily go along with the purpose expressed, can be indulged.⁴⁴ They have been usually held valid and enforceable,⁴⁵ and a proper exercise of the police power.⁴⁶ The acts complained of must have occurred after the taking effect of the law.⁴⁷ A statute is not ordinarily violated by a single⁴⁸ or occasional⁴⁹ act of transportation for hire, but, under some statutes, it has been held that violations are not excused merely because they are casual and irregular in their occurrence.⁵⁰

Vehicles covered. The question whether or not a particular motor vehicle is within the meaning of a statute depends on the terms and construction of the statute involved.⁵¹

115 Misc. 120, affirmed 188 N.Y.S. 579, 187 App.Div. 929—United Tract. Co. v. Smith, 187 N.Y.S. 377, 115 Misc. 73.

Defenses

(1) Defendant could not be convicted for operating taxicab without certificate of convenience and necessity from public service commission, where commission had made no rules, regulations, or orders regulating taxicabs, and had disclaimed jurisdiction to do so, and defendant could not have procured such certificate from the commission had he applied thereof.—Marshall v. State, 200 S. W.2d 491, 211 Ark. 380.

(2) Where nonresident was charged with violation of statute, protection from charge under reciprocal provision of motor vehicle license statute is matter of defense—State v. Caplan, 135 A. 705, 100 Vt. 140, followed in State v. Williams, 135 A. 713, 100 Vt. 160.

Letting of vehicles

(1) Where owner leased truck to interstate carrier for delivery within city of goods deposited in terminal of carrier in the city, and lessee exercised sole control over truck, owner was not guilty of unlawfully operating and maintaining a motor vehicle as a public cart without a license, as prohibited by ordinance.—People v. Heckman Trucking Co., 14 N.E.2d 801, 277 N.Y. 480.

(2) Where a corporation leased trucks to business house to be used to deliver and collect lessee's merchandise only, which was done without cost to lessee's customers, and drivers were supplied by lessor's wholly owned subsidiary under a separate agreement between lessee and the subsidiary, such leased trucks were not "public carts" and lessor was not a "public cartman" within meaning of statutory definitions thereof; nor was a license required for such operation of trucks under statute requiring license for operation of public carts kept for hire or used to carry merchandise for pay.—People v. S. & E. Motor Hire Corporation, 29 N.Y.S.2d 105.

(3) A statute requiring a permit to be obtained by anyone engaging in the business of transporting passengers for hire in any motor-propelled vehicle does not apply to the letting of an automobile by its owner to be used by such person—State v. Bee Hive Auto Serv. Co., 242 P. 384, 137 Wash. 372.

Ordinance held reasonable

An ordinance of city prohibiting use of certain streets by busses and trucks transporting passengers and property for hire, but not prohibiting use of such streets by busses whose principal routes were within city limits and by trucks using streets to receive or deliver shipment of goods, was reasonable and not unduly discriminatory or burdensome, where streets contained steep grades and were in residential district and there were other routes available for entrance and exit to the city.—Commonwealth v. Kennedy, 195 A. 770, 129 Pa.Super. 149.

Ordinance held invalid

Penal ordinance forbidding operation of automobile for hire, unless having attached thereto a taximeter of "standard size and design," to be approved by police chief if conforming to specified requirements, was held invalid as delegating to chief lawmaking power and unguided discretion.—Ex parte Wilmoth, 67 S.W. 2d 289, 125 Tex.Cr. 274.

Continuity of purpose

Act of operator of motor vehicle used as property carrier in "holding himself out for employment" within license statute connotes certain continuity of purpose, one day's hauling for neighbor at his request not necessarily being sufficient.—Commonwealth v. Doss, 167 S.E. 371, 159 Va. 968.

Regular operation

A transportation company which regularly operates its busses along an unauthorized route as an incident to its usual business, as distinguished from a mere isolated departure, caused by necessity, for repairs or gasoline or garage service, is subject to operation of prohibitory statute.—People v. McCue, 4 N.Y.S.2d 617, 254 App Div. 271.

Haulage on return trip

Truck owner who was permitted to haul, for compensation, agricultural and horticultural products exclusively from point of production, assembly, or primary manufacture to a certain city, who on return trip from such city hauled, for compensation, fertilizer to consumer consignees was held properly arrested for being engaged in transportation for compensation without a permit.—State ex rel. Coats v. Whitaker, supra.

Sight-seeing bus

(1) In order to come within statute creating offense of operating "sight-seeing bus" for hire without license, hiring must be of such character that general public, on payment of tariff, may board bus and be transported to some point of des-

Place of offense. A regulation requiring a license of persons engaged in the business of transporting passengers for hire within or through the municipality by means of any motor vehicle may be violated where the operator of the vehicle passes through the municipality, but does not solicit trade or take on or let off passengers within it,⁵² and the termini of the route need not be within the municipality.⁵³ Under an ordinance making the operation without a license of an autobus over the city streets unlawful, where the entire route of the bus lies wholly or partly within the limits of the city, it is immaterial whether or not passengers were taken on within the city limits,⁵⁴ and, where a fare is charged for the entire trip, part of which is outside the city limits, it cannot for that reason be contended that no fare is charged within the city limits.⁵⁵

(2) Persons Liable

The question whether or not a particular person is liable for a violation of a statute regulating and licensing motor vehicles employed in the transportation of passengers or goods for hire depends on the terms and the construction of such a statute.

The question whether or not a particular person is liable for a violation of a statute regulating and licensing motor vehicles employed in the transportation of passengers or goods for hire depends on the terms and the construction of such a statute.⁵⁶ Under some statutes, both the owner and his employee, such as a driver of a motor vehicle, have been held liable for a violation of the statute.⁵⁷ Under other statutes, an employee who is not an owner, such as a driver of a motor vehicle, is not liable.⁵⁸ Where the ordinance makes operation of a bus unlawful if either the bus or the driver is unlicensed, both ownership and operation of the bus are not necessary to constitute a violation,⁵⁹ and, one who owns an autobus and hires the drivers operates it within the meaning of such an ordinance.⁶⁰

Aiders or abettors. Under some statutes, any person who aids or abets in the violation of the statute is guilty of the offense,⁶¹ and any person who conducts a travel bureau may be guilty under such a statute.⁶² tination.—People v. Oestreicher, 22 N. Y.S.2d 899, 175 Misc. 151.

(2) A bus, especially built for children and owned by company deriving ninety-two per cent of its annual revenue from operation of its busses under contract with city board of education to transport children between their homes and schools, was not "sight-seeing bus" unlawfully operated by such company's employee without license while being used during school vacation under special charter primarily for purpose of taking children to and from day camps and incidentally to and from movies, museums, etc., in bad weather.—People v. Oestreicher, supra.

Taxicab

(1) A "taxicab" within statute prohibiting use of motor vehicles as taxicabs without appropriate license therefor and declaring violation a criminal offense is a motor vehicle offered for hire to the public generally upon the streets of city, and hence motor vehicle available only for hire on private property within city of New York and not plying the streets seeking public employment, was not taxicab within the statute.—People v. Reser, 75 N.Y.S.2d 723, 190 Misc. 804.

(2) Ordinance prohibiting operation in city of any motor vehicle for carriage of persons for hire at rate of fare of fourteen cents or less for each passenger without first having procured certificate of public convenience and necessity was held not to apply to taxicabs with a carrying capacity of not more than seven persons, but only to omnibusses and motor vehicles with a carrying capacity of more than seven persons.—People v. Verro, 295 N.Y.S. 313, 162 Misc. 313.

A nonresident may be guilty of violation of such a statute.—State v. Caplan, 135 A. 705, 100 Vt. 140, followed in State v. Williams, 135 A. 713, 100 Vt. 160.

Chauffeur

A mere chauffeur of a transportation company was not an "officer or agent" of transportation company within meaning of statute authorizing prosecution of an officer or agent for violation of statute prohibiting operation of a bus on an unapproved route.—People v. McCue, 4 N.Y.S.2d 617, 254 App.Div. 271.

(3) Prosecution

In a prosecution for a violation of a statute regulating and licensing motor vehicles employed in the transportation of passengers or goods for hire, general rules usually apply.

A prosecution for a violation of a statute regulating and licensing motor vehicles employed in the transportation of passengers or goods for hire need not be instituted by the commission after determining the fact that accused is operating in violation of the law, but the law may be invoked by any person.⁶³ An indictment, information, or complaint must set forth all the facts required to establish the offense and to bring accused within the statutory provisions.⁶⁴ For example, it must allege

Travelers benevolent association

Accused, who incorporated so-called travelers benevolent association and contracted with owners or operators of automobiles, and with persons desiring transportation, for transportation at a fixed rate per mile, and had fixed, permanent place of business where passenger would take conveyance and pay fare, was guilty of operating a motor vehicle upon a public highway without a permit from the corporation commission, where neither accused nor owner or operator of motor vehicle had permit for operation as a motor carrier, notwithstanding execution by operator and accused of so-called lease contracts, and execution by accused and passenger of so-called rental contracts.—Hudgins v. State, 133 P.2d 231, 75 Okl.Cr. 446.

63. Mich.—People v. Carr, 203 N.W. 948, 231 Mich. 246.

Cease and desist order

The commission need not order person to cease and desist violating statute before beginning prosecution for operating transportation company without certificate.—Madden Bros. v. Railroad & Warehouse Commission of Minnesota, D.C.Minn., 43 F.2d 236, appeal dismissed, C.C.A., 49 F.2d 1080.

Language of statute

A charge which substantially follows the language of the statute is usually sufficient.

Warrant

Warrant charging that defendant, on specified day, operated truck with improper license, but not charging that he held himself out for employment or operated over state highways, charged no crime.—Commonwealth v. Doss, 167 S.E. 371, 159 Va. 968.

69. Proof of solicitation

Conviction for operating bus without public hack driver's license or public hack license requires proof of solicitation of public business.—People v. Paradiso, 239 N.Y.S. 355, 135 Misc. 337.

Exceptions

In any proceeding to prosecute auto company for operating without certificate of public convenience, the state must show that company is an auto transportation company and not within exceptions to act.—Madden Bros. v. Railroad & Warehouse Commission of Minnesota, D.C.Minn., 43 F.2d 236, appeal dismissed, C.C.A., 49 F.2d 1080.

Statutory rule

that the trip made was without the license required,⁶⁵ and that defendant has not paid the tax imposed by law.⁶⁶ An allegation that defendant allowed his motor vehicle "to be employed in public service conveying four passengers to" is insufficient to show that defendant acted as a public carrier.⁶⁷ Where the complaint charges, in separate counts, three offenses of driving without a license, a conviction finding defendant guilty as charged in the complaint is bad where there is no proof as to two of the offenses.⁶⁸ In the absence of special statutes, general rules usually apply with respect to the evidence,⁶⁹ questions of law and fact,⁷⁰ judgment, sentence, and punishment,⁷¹ and review.⁷²

senagers who are charged individual fares evidence of a practice of making such trips, should be given effect in prosecution against passenger stage corporation for failure to obtain the necessary certificate.—People v. Stolzoff, 162 P.2d 743, 71 Cal.App.2d Supp. 849.

70. Question for trial court

In prosecution for violating Public Utilities Act requiring passenger stage corporation transporting passengers between fixed termini to obtain certificate from railroad commission, whether transportation of passengers from Camp Elliott to San Diego was a sufficient designation of fixed termini was question for the trial court.—People v. Stolzoff, 162 P.2d 743, 71 Cal.App.2d Supp. 849.

b. Letting for Hire

Under some statutes, it may be an offense to violate regulations with respect to the leasing or renting of motor vehicles.

It is not a crime, in the absence of a statute prohibiting it, to let a motor vehicle for hire for a lawful purpose.⁷³ Under some statutes, however, it may be an offense to violate regulations with respect to the leasing or renting of motor vehicles.⁷⁴

§ 702. Transporting Stolen Vehicle in Interstate Commerce; Receiving Such Vehicle.

Under federal statutes, it is an offense either to transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce a motor vehicle, knowing it to have been stolen; or to receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of any motor vehicle, moving as, or which is part of, or which constitutes, interstate or foreign commerce, knowing it to have been stolen.

Under the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act, also known as the Dyer Act,⁷⁵ now 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2311-2313, it is made an indictable offense either to transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce a motor vehicle, knowing it to have been stolen,⁷⁶ or to receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of any motor vehicle, moving as, or which is part of, or which constitutes, interstate or foreign commerce, knowing it to have been stolen.⁷⁷ The term "motor vehicle" by the terms of the statute includes automobile, automobile truck, and virtually every conceivable variety of self-propelled vehicle on land.⁷⁸

Validity. The provision prohibiting the transportation of stolen vehicles in interstate commerce⁷⁹ and the provision forbidding the receiving, concealing, selling, etc., of such vehicles⁸⁰ have both been held to be a valid exercise of the police power of congress in the regulation of interstate commerce, and, therefore, not unconstitutional;⁸¹ the latter provision, more particularly, on the ground that it applies only where the prohibited acts are a final step in the use of interstate transportation to promote the scheme of unlawfully disposing of the stolen vehicle and of withholding it from its owner,⁸² and merely makes more effective the regulation forbidding transportation of stolen cars.⁸³

Elements of offense. The transportation of a stolen motor vehicle in interstate commerce with guilty knowledge constitutes the crime.⁸⁴ The stat-

Commerce; interstate commerce

(1) The term "commerce" within the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act means passing to and fro.—Whitaker v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 5 F.2d 546, certiorari denied 46 S.Ct. 25, 269 U.S. 569, 70 L.Ed. 416.

(2) The term "interstate commerce" by the terms of the act means the transportation or causing to be moved from one state, territory, or District of Columbia, to another state, territory, or District of Columbia.

D.C.—Whitaker v. Hitt, 285 F. 797, 52 App.D.C. 149, 27 A.L.R. 951.

(3) The fact that the definition of "interstate commerce" or "foreign commerce" as contained in the act is not as broad as the term "commerce" used in the constitution does not invalidate the act, since congress can make criminal a particular use to which one or more of the instrumentalities of interstate commerce may be applied, to the exclusion of all others.—Whitaker v. ute does not require an intent to engage in an act of commerce to make it an offense;⁸⁵ and the name of neither the owner of the vehicle nor of the person from whom it was stolen,⁸⁶ nor the value of the vehicle,⁸⁷ is an element of the crime. The larceny element of the offense is satisfied when there is a taking against the will of the owner or a trespass to his possession,⁸⁸ which may occur when the owner is induced by some fraud or trickery to deliver possession of the vehicle to one who feloniously converts it to his own use.⁸⁹

In order to constitute the offense of receiving, concealing, selling, etc., such a vehicle, it is essential that it was stolen⁹⁰ and that it is moving as, or is a part of, or constitutes, interstate or foreign commerce.⁹¹ It is not essential that accused knew that the automobile was moving in interstate commerce;⁹² knowledge that it had been stolen is sufficient.⁹³

§ 703. — What Constitutes "Transportation"

A vehicle may be transported within the statute when it is shipped by common carrier or moved on its own wheels.

of transportation is immaterial with respect to the commission of the offense,⁹⁵ since the mere act of removal of an automobile from one state to another⁹⁶ or to a foreign country⁹⁷ is a transportation in interstate or foreign commerce within the meaning of the act. The fact that the automobile is subsequently transported back to the place of starting does not alter the interstate character of the transportation,⁹⁸ and the rule is the same where a stolen automobile is transported from one point in the state to another point in the same state, but moves in its course through another state.⁹⁹ It is not necessary that the automobile should have left the state in which it was stolen before there is a transportation within the act; there may be a violation thereof, even though the motor vehicle involved has not left the state in which interstate movement was begun.¹

It is not essential within the meaning of the act that the transportation be for the purpose of engaging in an act of commerce² or with a view to financial or pecuniary gain or benefit,³ for the mere driving of a stolen automobile from one state to another on its own power is in itself "interstate commerce" within the act,⁴ irrespective of what was intended to be done with the car in the latter state or elsewhere;⁵ and it is immaterial, therefore, whether the transportation was merely for the personal use or convenience of accused⁶ or that

§ 704. — Jurisdiction and Venue

The National Motor Theft Act expressly provided that a violation thereof may be punished in any district in or through which a stolen motor vehicle has been transported or removed.

The National Motor Vehicle Theft Act expressly provided that a violation thereof may be punished in any district in or through which a stolen motor vehicle has been transported or removed.⁹ This provision was held valid,¹⁰ as applied to the offense of transporting a stolen vehicle,¹¹ but invalid, if construed as authorizing a prosecution for a sale thereof to be brought outside the district where the sale occurred.¹²

§ 705. — Indictment

An indictment in a prosecution for a violation of the statute must allege every element entering into the offense.

The rules as to indictments in criminal prosecution usually apply with respect to an indictment in a prosecution for a violation of the statute.¹³

The indictment must expressly and distinctly allege every element entering into the offense as set forth in the statute.¹⁴ Ordinarily, charging the offense in the language of the statute,¹⁵ or substantially in the language of the statute,¹⁶ is sufficient. The indictment must show the interstate character of the offense,¹⁷ even where the prosecution is for a sale of the vehicle.¹⁸ While it has been held that the fact that the vehicle was stolen must¹⁹ or should²⁰ be alleged, there need be no direct averment that the vehicle was stolen.²¹ The indictment must sufficiently charge defendant with knowledge that the vehicle involved had been stolen²² and it should also contain a specific description of such vehicle.²³

It is not necessary to set forth the particulars of the theft²⁴ or any other matters which are not elements of the crime as defined by the statute.²⁵ Thus, it is not necessary to allege the ownership of the motor vehicle²⁶ or the name of the person from whom it was stolen,²⁷ or the value thereof,²⁸ or describe the localities where the theft occurred,²⁹ or the time when it occurred,³⁰ or the manner in which the vehicle was transported.³¹ Since the transportation need not be for the purpose of engaging in commerce, such intent, likewise, need not be charged.³² An indictment which alleges that defendant did "transport and cause to be transported in interstate commerce" a stolen automobile is sufficient to cover the movement of the automobile either under its own power or by carriage as freight, and is not defective for lack of particularization.³³

Issues, proof, and variance. General rules usually apply with respect to the issues, proof, and variance.³⁴

§ 706. — Evidence

In a prosecution for a violation of the statute, the burden of proof is on the prosecution to establish all the essential elements of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt.

In a prosecution for a violation of the statute, the burden of proof is on the prosecution to establish all the essential elements of the offense.³⁵ Thus, the burden is on the prosecution to prove the interstate character of the offense,³⁶ that the motor vehicle involved was stolen,³⁷ and that accused knew it to be stolen at the time it was transported in interstate or foreign commerce.³⁸ Where the indictment names the alleged owner of the vehicle, it is also essential for the government to prove that that automobile was stolen from such owner as alleged.³⁹

Possession of a stolen motor vehicle, under some circumstances, may raise a presumption or warrant an inference of guilt.⁴⁰ Such a presumption is not one of law,⁴¹ but one of fact.⁴² It has been held that, although possession of a recently stolen motor vehicle may call for an explanation,⁴³ it is not necessary that the explanation should come from defendant,⁴⁴ since it may arise from evidence introduced by the prosecution,⁴⁵ or the testimony of defendant's good character may rebut any possible inference of guilty knowledge which might otherwise arise from the possession.⁴⁶

Admissibility. The rules regulating the admission of evidence in criminal cases usually govern the admissibility of evidence.⁴⁷ Any competent evidence is admissible which tends to establish the knowledge of defendant that the car in question had been stolen.⁴⁸

Weight and sufficiency. In order to warrant a conviction for the violation of the statute, the evidence must be sufficient to establish defendant's guilt and all the essential elements of the offense.⁴⁹

§ 707. — Questions of Law and Fact

Generally, in trials for violation of a federal statute relating to the interstate transportation, sale, or receipt of stolen motor vehicles, it is the province of the jury to determine questions of fact.

In accordance with general rules, in trials for violation of a federal statute relating to the interstate transportation, sale, or receipt of stolen motor vehicles, questions of fact ordinarily are for the jury,⁵³ and it is the province of the jury to determine the guilt or innocence of accused under the evidence.⁵⁴ Where there is sufficient evidence to sustain a verdict of guilty, it is not error to refuse to direct a verdict for defendants.⁵⁵

In accordance with general rules, the court should give full and accurate instructions applicable to the case.

In accordance with general rules, the court should give full and accurate instructions applicable to the case,⁵⁶ but is not required to charge propositions, however correctly stated, unless the evidence before the jury justifies them.⁵⁷ The court should instruct the jury as to the essential elements of the offense charged,⁵⁸ but it is unnecessary to separate, distinguish, and emphasize each element of the offense.⁵⁹ Instructions as to the degree, quantity, or weight of evidence required to convict⁶⁰ and the duty of the jury in weighing and considering the evidence⁶¹ should be in accordance with the rules of law governing such questions. The court should not give instructions which are misleading,⁶² but the charge is to be judged as a whole, and not by some incidental statement which, taken by itself, might be misleading.⁶³ Requested instructions are properly refused where they do not state the law correctly,⁶⁴ or where they unduly accentuate and give prominence to particular issues or defenses,⁶⁵ or where they are sufficiently covered by the other charges given.⁶⁶

42 C.J. p 1409 note 52.

Definition of terms. Where the court undertakes to define the terms used in the statute, it should give a correct definition.⁶⁷

§ 709. — Verdict and Findings

In a prosecution for violation of a federal statute relating to the interstate transportation, sale, or receipt of stolen motor vehicles, general rules usually apply to the verdict.

Where the jury return a general verdict of guilty, defendant is thereby convicted of all the acts charged in the count,⁶⁸ and, if one of the acts so charged is such that accused could not be punished for it, as where he has already been convicted for its commission, the charge of such act may be ignored and treated as surplusage, and the verdict treated as one of guilty of the remainder of the acts charged in the count.⁶⁹ Since the provisions define distinct offenses, a verdict of guilty on a count charging interstate transportation is not inconsistent with a verdict of guilty on another count of the indictment charging the selling, storing, or concealment of the same vehicle.⁷⁰ It is within the province of the court to have a verdict corrected to conform to the actual finding of the jury, either in open court or by allowing the jury to retire.⁷¹

§ 710. — Judgment, Sentence, and Punishment

General rules usually apply as to the form and sufficiency of the sentence after conviction.

General rules usually apply as to the form and sufficiency of the sentence after a conviction.⁷² Distinct and separate penalties are provided for each of the two offenses defined,⁷³ and either or both penalties may be inflicted on a person who is found guilty of both offenses.⁷⁴ Since there is no provision which prescribes the district or prison in which one convicted of its violation shall serve his sentence, such person may be sentenced to a federal penitentiary outside the districts in which the stolen vehicle was transported.⁷⁵

§ 711. — Appeal and Error

The review of a judgment of conviction for violation of a federal statute relating to the interstate transportation, sale, or receipt of a stolen motor vehicle is governed by the general rules.

A judgment will not be reversed for error which was not harmful or prejudicial to any substantial rights of accused.⁷⁶ Where the sentence of defendant is no greater than could have been imposed on the first count of an indictment, it is unnecessary to inquire whether the evidence supports the verdict on the other counts.⁷⁷

§ 712. Using Prohibited Way

It may be an offense to violate regulations prohibiting the use of motor vehicles upon certain highways, parkways, or streets.

72. Stating or identifying crime

§ 713. Wrongful Removal of Parts

Under some statutes, it is an offense, unlawfully and without authority from the owner, to remove from a motor vehicle certain specified parts thereof, or any other part or parts attached to the motor vehicle which are necessary in the use, control, repair, or operation thereof.

Under some statutes, it is a penal offense for one, maliciously or willfully or with intent to steal and without authority from the owner, to remove from a motor vehicle certain specified parts thereof, or any other part or parts attached to the motor vehicle which are necessary in the use, control, repair, or operation thereof.⁷⁹ Such a statute has been held not superseded by, or in conflict with, another statute which forbids the willful breaking of, injury to, or tampering with, the parts of a motor vehicle,⁸⁰ as it is manifest that parts of a car may be broken, injured, and tampered with without being removed.⁸¹ An information, under such a statute, which charges the removal of any of those things specifically named therein need not allege that such property was necessary to the use, control, repair, or operation of the motor vehicle,⁸² but such an allegation is only necessary where the property taken is some part of the automobile which is not specifically mentioned in the statute.⁸³

Intent or guilty knowledge. Whether or not intent or guilty knowledge is an essential element of the offense depends on the terms of the particular statute or ordinance involved and its purpose and design,⁹⁰ and, under some statutes or ordinances, intent or guilty knowledge is not an element of the offense.⁹¹

Persons liable. The owner of a motor vehicle is liable for a violation of a parking regulation,⁹² even though he did not park or permit parking of the motor vehicle.⁹³ Public officials,⁹⁴ such as a probation officer,⁹⁵ have been held not exempt from liability for a violation of such a regulation.

Prosecution. In the absence of special statutory provisions, general rules usually apply in a prosecution for a violation of a parking regulation⁹⁶ with respect to the charge or complaint,⁹⁷ presumptions,⁹⁸ and, likewise such general rules

(1) Where, after ticket was attached to automobile for parking near hydrant, a complaint was filed, a warrant issued, and owner of automobile was taken on the warrant and appeared in trial of the case, court had jurisdiction of owner.—City of Chicago v. Crane, 49 N.E.2d 802, 319 Ill. App. 623.

(2) Where warrants under which motorist was arrested at night for violation of parking ordinances were valid warrants for execution except in the nighttime or on Sunday, the city court acquired jurisdiction of the person of the motorist when he was brought before the court charged with infractions of the parking ordinance, regardless of the legality of the arrest, and, hence, the manner of the arrest did not affect the validity of motorist's trial and convictions.—People v. Baxter, 36 N.Y.S.2d 1020, 178 Misc. 625, appeal dismissed 37 N.Y.S.2d 489, 264 App. Div. 961.

(3) The traffic magistrate's court could proceed against motorist charged with parking in violation of traffic regulations adopted by police commissioner, under provision of city charter authorizing commissioner to make such rules for conduct of traffic as he may deem necessary.—People v. Simon, 60 N.Y.S.2d 740, 186 Misc. 1019.

Matters not considered

In prosecution for violating double-parking ordinance, whether double parking interfered with traffic as a fact is not a question for court to consider.—People v. Baxter, 32 N.Y.S.2d 320, motion denied 32 N.Y.S.2d 325, affirmed 36 N.Y.S.2d 1020, 178 Misc. 625, appeal dismissed 37 N.Y.S.2d 489, 264 App.Div. 961.

Warrant held insufficient

N.C.—State v. Smith, 189 S.E. 509, 211 N.C. 206.

98. Particular presumptions

(1) The statutory prima facie presumption that registered owner of illegally parked motor vehicle was person who parked it is valid.—People v. Bigman, 100 P.2d 370, 38 Cal. App.2d Supp. 773.

(2) In prosecution for violation of traffic regulation in parking overtime, proof that automobile in question was found parked at the time and places charged for the length of time charged in the complaint, and that defendant was the licensed owner of such automobile made out a prima facie case for conviction, because, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it would be presumed that the automobile was controlled by defendant, and that he personally violated the regulation.—People v. Rubin, 31 N.E.2d 501, 284 N.Y. 392.

b. Right of Way

It may be an offense, under some statutes or ordinances, for an operator of a motor vehicle to violate regulations as to the right of way.

It may be an offense, under some statutes or ordinances, for an operator of a motor vehicle to violate regulations as to the right of way,³ such as a right of way to which pedestrians are entitled under particular conditions.⁴ In the absence of special statutory provisions, general rules usually apply in a prosecution for a violation of a right of way regulation,⁵ as with respect to the charge or complaint,⁶ and the evidence.⁷

chester v. Tutty, 6 N.Y.S.2d 975, 169 Misc. 358.

99. Burden on defendant

(1) Defendant, charged with parking in violation of traffic regulation adopted by police commissioner pursuant to proclamations issued by chief city magistrate, who claimed that no fine could be imposed under last two of three proclamations because of failure to recite that majority of magistrates consented to proclamations, was required to prove that such proclamations were not in fact consented to by majority of city magistrates.—People v. Simon, 60 N.Y.S.2d 740, 186 Misc. 1049.

(2) In proceeding for violation of automobile parking regulation, it was held that on introduction of evidence of ownership and illegal parking prosecution may rest on presumption of guilt, making it incumbent on defendant to produce evidence that would negative presumption, since presumptions need not always be provided for by statute.—People v. Marchetti, 276 N.Y.S. 708, 154 Misc. 147.

Knowledge or intent

In prosecution for overtime parking under ordinance, people were held not required to prove that registered owner knew of ordinance or consciously intended to permit violation thereof.—People v. Forbath, 42 P.2d 108, 5 Cal.App.2d Supp. 767.

Directing acquittal error

In prosecution for violation of city parking ordinance, wherein parties filed stipulation showing that defendant's automobile remained parked upon streets longer than allowed by law, and ordinance provided that ownership of automobile should be prima facie evidence of owner's authority or permission to violate ordinance, directing an acquittal was error.—Commonwealth v. Kroger, 122 S.W.2d 1006, 276 Ky. 20.

3. Ohio—City of Columbus v. Rader, App., 78 N.E.2d 424.

Danger of collision

As respects question when one must yield right of way, questions of right of way arise between two users of highway only when there is danger of a collision between them if both proceed on their respective ways without delay.—People v. McLachlan, 93 P.2d 280, 36 Cal.App.2d Supp. 754.

Intersection

Motorist has statutory right of way at intersection only if he is driving in a lawful manner at time of entering intersection, and motorist could not be convicted of violating ordinance for failure to yield right of way to automobile which approached from right but which entered intersection to left of center and thus was not proceeding in a lawful manner.—City of Columbus v. Rader, Ohio App., 78 N.E.2d 424.

4. Cal.—People v. McLachlan, 93 P.2d 280, 36 Cal.App.2d Supp. 754.

"Right of way" construed

The term "right of way," as used in statute requiring vehicles turning right or left to yield right of way to pedestrians lawfully within intersection or adjacent to crosswalk, does not refer to a duty which pedestrian must exercise but something which may be waived.—People v. Noland, 189 P.2d 84, 83 Cal.App.2d Supp. 819.

Crosswalk

The statute providing that a motorist shall yield right of way to pedestrian on crosswalk does not require motorist to stop before entering crosswalk in all cases, but motorist must stop whenever necessary to discharge his duty, and, when pedestrian crossing roadway on crosswalk is so far from path of an approaching automobile and proceeding in such manner that no interference between them is reasonably to be expected, motorist need not wait as respects his duty under statute to yield the right of way, and need not anticipate that pedestrian will suddenly change his mind and reverse his course of travel, in absence of circumstances reasonably suggesting such a course, as respects his duty under statute to yield right of way.—People v. McLachlan, 93 P.2d 280, 36 Cal.App.2d Supp. 754.

5. Cal.—People v. McLachlan, supra.

Nature of proceeding

Proceeding charging motorist with failure to yield right of way to fire apparatus was held not a criminal action so as to preclude member of fire department from serving process under statute restricting right to serve process to a criminal action arising under laws relating to fires and extinguishment thereof and to fire perils.—People, on Complaint of Timmins v. Springer, 10 N.Y.S.2d 136, 170 Misc. 554.

Jurisdiction

Where defendant appeared in person and by counsel in proceeding wherein he was charged with failure to yield right of way to fire apparatus and to drive to position parallel and close to curb, jurisdiction attached and it could not later be questioned.—People, on Complaint of Timmins v. Springer, supra.

c. Stop Signs or Signals

It is an offense, under some statutes or ordinances, for an operator of a motor vehicle to violate regulations with respect to stop signs or signals.

It is an offense, under some statutes or ordinances, for an operator of a motor vehicle to violate regulations with respect to stop signs or signals.⁸ In the absence of special statutory provisions, general rules usually apply in a prosecution for such an offense,⁹ as with respect to the information or complaint,¹⁰ evidence,¹¹ and punishment.¹²

d. Miscellaneous

Regulations with respect to other offenses relating to motor vehicles have been considered by the courts, and particular conduct has been held to constitute or not to constitute a violation thereof.

In addition to the offenses, as considered supra § 596 et seq, there have been cases relating to other offenses involving motor vehicles.¹³ Thus, there

Pa.—Commonwealth v. Smith, 57 Pa. Dist. & Co. 396—Commonwealth v. Wagner, Quar.Sess., 58 Montg.Co. 108.

Absence of traffic

Motorist driving through intersection without stopping at stop sign as required by ordinance violated the ordinance, although uncontradicted evidence showed that there was no traffic in intersection or moving toward it or in sight that could be regulated or endangered, where ordinance made it motorist's imperative duty to bring automobile to full stop irrespective of traffic—City of Des Moines v. Pugh, 2 N.W.2d 754, 231 Iowa 1283.

Ambulance

Ordinance requiring all except police and fire department vehicles to stop at street intersections where red light is showing was held applicable to ambulance driven in response to emergency call, it being immaterial that street upon which ambulance was driven was designated as part of state highway system.—Thompson v. City of Memphis, 66 S.W.2d 990, 167 Tenn. 75.

Erection of proper signs

(1) Under some statutes, a regulation is not enforceable where proper stop signs have not been erected.—Commonwealth v. Bieber, 44 Pa.Dist. & Co. 193, 58 Montg.Co. 53, 56 York Leg.Rec. 6—Commonwealth v. Spang, 33 Pa.Dist. & Co. 641, 30 Mun.L.R. 191.

(2) Sign held properly erected for daytime driving.—Commonwealth v. Bieber, supra.

Operation of signal

Where city officials in control of mechanically operated traffic control signal operated by city in public street determined that it should be operated for only a part of each day, a motorist who drove past signal at a time when officials determined that it should not be in operation could not be convicted for failure to stop, notwithstanding semaphore arm of signal directed him to "Stop," it appearing that signal was controlled by an electric clock and deviations from established schedule could be attributed only to some mechanical defect or irregularity in control mechanism.—People v. Selbares, 107 P.2d 506, 41 Cal App.2d Supp. 962.

9. Commencement of proceedings

Prosecution for driving through stop sign in violation of ordinance was not "commenced" by summons which was handed to defendant for purpose of notifying him that he had violated an ordinance but was commenced by information filed in municipal court, as against contention that action was commenced by summons which was a malicious threat to extort money from defendant, under pretense of acting in an official capacity and that municipal court acquired no jurisdiction—City of Des Moines v. Pugh, 2 N.W.2d 754, 231 Iowa 1283.

Jurisdiction

Since prohibited passing of traffic signal was misdemeanor, it was held not triable in city magistrate's court.—People v. Lindner, 234 N.Y.S. 89, 133 Misc. 728.

10. N.Y.—People v. Lindner, supra. Ohio.—Village of Englewood v. Betlis, 30 Ohio N.P.,N.S., 491.

Information held not fatally defective

Information charging violation of ordinance by driving through stop sign, entitled "city of Des Moines," and having directly underneath the words "State of Iowa" was not fatally defective as joining both city of Des Moines and state as plaintiffs and in alleging the violation of both the ordinance and statute and as violating constitutional provision that style of all process shall be "the State of Iowa" and that all prosecutions shall be conducted in name and by authority of the state—City of Des Moines v. Pugh, 2 N.W.2d 754, 231 Iowa 1283.

Information or complaint held insufficient

11. Iowa—City of Des Moines v. Pugh, 2 N.W.2d 754, 231 Iowa 1283. Pa.—Commonwealth v. Wagner, Quar.Sess., 58 Montg.Co. 108.

Admissibility

In prosecution for failure to stop at stop sign, evidence that defendant was driving fifty miles per hour for a distance of two blocks before he reached stop sign was competent as tending to show commission of crime charged.—People v. Wedge, 48 N.E. 2d 943, 383 Ill. 217.

Fraud in application for registration or certificate of title

(1) Statute making it a felony to fraudulently use a false or fictitious name in making application for registration of a vehicle or a certificate of title was intended not only to protect sellers of automobile, but also to enable police to trace from license plate the true owner of an automobile, and word "fraudulent" was inserted so that persons who habitually use a fixed pseudonym would not be guilty of a felony, and was intended to require proof that accused gave wrong name with bad motive, so that the mere use of a name other than own does not of it-

have been cases involving the violation of regulations with respect to advertising,¹⁴ noise,¹⁵ width¹⁶ or equipment¹⁷ or inspection¹⁸ of motor vehicles, the occupancy of the driver's seat,¹⁹ starting, stopping, or turning of motor vehicles,²⁰ or setting in motion or interfering with a parked vehicle without the authority of the driver,²¹ and the emission of smoke, gas, or other substances.²²

It is also an offense, under some statutes or ordi-self make out prima facie case of bad motive.—State v. Bland, 73 P.2d 964, 93 Utah 384.

(2) Use of fictitious name on application for automobile registration was held fraudulent, and punishable under statute prohibiting such practice, even though accused used such name in business and private affairs, where accused did not state in application for initial license that name he gave was of same person as was real name which was on list of revoked licenses, and where accused gave incorrect address and falsely stated his license had never been revoked.—State v. Librizzi, 188 A. 511, 14 N.J.Misc. 904.

(2) In a prosecution for possessing automobile tires on which numbers had been mutilated, instruction that, if accused kept automobile tire in possession with knowledge of mutilation of serial number, he would be guilty, was held not erroneous.—Hall v. State, 286 S.W. 1026, 171 Ark. 787.

Authority to adopt

Traffic regulation of city providing that no person shall operate, or cause to be operated, upon any street, an advertising vehicle except where vehicles are engaged in usual business of owner and not mainly for advertising, was within authority of police commissioner to adopt under charter provision giving police commissioner power to regulate movement of vehicular traffic for convenience of public and for proper protection of human life and health.—People v. Railway Exp. Agency, supra.

Burden of proof

Where city ordinance prohibited operation of advertising vehicles upon city streets, but excluded from prohibition vehicles being operated in usual business or regular work of owner, when not used primarily for advertising purposes, it was incumbent on state to establish by evidence that defendant was not within the exclusionary portion of ordinance.—State v. Hind, 10 N.W.2d 258, 143 Neb. 479.

15. Muffler cutout

Refusal to submit issue of lack of criminal intent and guilty knowledge in driving automobile with muffler cutout, and charge to convict if defendant drove car with cutout, was held error under evidence.—Kellum v. State, 7 S.W.2d 1078, 110 Tex.Cr. 260.

Amplifying device

Ordinance prohibiting use or operation of amplifying device in front or outside of, or in or through, window of any building, "place," or premises, without license, was held inapplicable to vehicle in motion.—People v. Weisblatt, 258 N.Y.S. 687, 144 Misc. 297.

(1) Where defendant used her automobile to push complainant's parked automobile sufficient distance to leave pathway leading from street curb to door of defendant's residence unobstructed, and brakes on complainant's automobile were not released by defendant, defendant could not be convicted for violating statute providing that no person shall set any vehicle in motion without authority of driver, since complainant's automobile was not set in "motion" within the statute.—People v. Propp, 31 N.E.2d 915, 284 N.Y. 491.

(2) If title to automobile has not passed under conditional sales contract, no force was used by seller's agent in securing possession of the automobile, and seller was owner of the automobile, agent could not be found guilty of statutory offense of interfering with standing vehicle because of taking possession of automobile parked in the street by buyer.—*Lepley v. XII. GARAGE KEEPERS, REPAIRMEN, VEHICLE LIVERYMEN, AND FILLING STATIONS

§ 715. Definitions

A garage is a building in which motor vehicles are stored and cared for; and it is public or private accordingly as it is or is not maintained for the accommodation of the public. A parking lot is a lot on which the business of parking automobiles for short periods of time in an open-air location is carried on for the accommodation of the public.

A garage is a building in which motor vehicles are stored and cared for.²⁶

A public garage is a building in which for compensation motor vehicles are stored primarily for safe-keeping and not merely as an incident to being repaired.²⁷ A public service station, in the automobile business, is a place at which the public is served with automobile supplies and repairs.²⁸

A private garage is a structure or building kept for the storage of motorcars by the owners, or certain other persons, but not for the general public.²⁹

Secret number

The legislature, in enacting statute making sale of automobile on which manufacturer's serial number or engine number has been destroyed, removed, covered, altered, or defaced, with knowledge thereof, a felony, had in mind the numbers that prominently appear on engine and doorjamb of an automobile, which are universally used by those engaged in automobile business and by motor vehicle bureaus, and did not intend to include a number secretly placed on obscure part of an automobile for purpose of aiding in detection of theft—Commonwealth v. Unkrich, supra.

Agent

Export merchant who in good faith, as agent for foreign customer, purchased automobile, the motor number of which was altered for export purposes, did not violate statute prohibiting "sale" of motor vehicle whose original engine number has been altered, since merchant acted as agent in purchasing the automobile, and there was no "sale" by him to customer within meaning of statute—People, on Complaint of Shanley, v. Stowers, 19 N.Y.S.2d 921, 259 App. Div. 528.

A parking lot is a lot on which the business of parking automobiles temporarily is conducted for a stipulated rental;³⁰ and the parking-lot business is the business carried on for the accommodation of the public, in providing parking and specialized service facilities for automobiles, for short periods of time, in an open-air location.³¹

A garage keeper is one whose business it is to keep automobiles for hire or to keep them stored ready for use or orders.³²

§ 716. Power to Regulate

The business of conducting or operating a public garage or a gasoline filling station is subject to regulation under the police power, as is also the business of renting automobiles without drivers.

Notwithstanding some authority to the contrary,³³ the business of conducting or operating a public garage is considered peculiarly the subject of regulation under the police power³⁴ of the state,³⁵ or the police power granted to a municipality by constitution³⁶ or statute.³⁷ So too, the well-known inconveniences and unusual hazards to the public attending the operation of gasoline filling stations render them peculiarly subject to regulation under the police power.³⁸

Renting motor vehicles without drivers. There is authority both for the view that automobiles hired out without drivers are dedicated to public use so as to be subject to regulation³⁹ and for the view that the business of leasing motor vehicles without drivers to selected customers is not affected with a public interest and the property so employed is not amenable to legislative regulation and control, in the exercise of the police power of the state, in respect of its productivity for the owner's private uses.⁴⁰

A municipality is considered to have power to make reasonable regulations of such business⁴¹ in so far as it is conducted within the limits, and on the streets, of the municipality;⁴² and its power in this respect is not dependent on the operation of the automobiles as common carriers.⁴³ It has been held that the police power of a municipality in this respect is limited only by the extent of the public need for regulation in the promotion of peace, safety, and morals.⁴⁴

Use of streets by wrecker cars. A home-rule city has power to prohibit the use of its streets by the owners of wrecker vehicles and their employees for the purpose of towing wrecked automobiles, clearing wreckage off the streets, and soliciting such business and that of repairing wrecked automobiles.⁴⁵

§ 717. Statutory and Local Regulations in General

Statutes and ordinances authorizing municipal districts to acquire parking spaces to serve the public, prohibiting the parking or operation of private wrecker cars at or near the scene of an automobile accident, or regulating the business of renting automobiles to be driven by the lessees are considered valid.

Statutes and ordinances held valid include those which classify separately, for purposes of regulation, automobiles kept and used for the purpose of renting them without drivers,⁴⁶ require the owners of such automobiles to submit them for inspection,⁴⁷ make the owner liable for damages caused by the operation of the vehicle to the same extent as the operator would have been liable if he had also been the owner of the vehicle,⁴⁸ or require the owner to file or deposit an insurance policy, surety bond, or cash security, covering the lessee's liability, up to a certain amount, for damages caused by his negligent operation of the vehicle.⁴⁹ However, a statute requiring the filing of a bond or insurance policy has been held invalid where it is applicable only in cities and there are in the state many villages which are as large as, or are larger than, many cities;⁵⁰ and, in the absence of statutory authority therefor, an ordinance which requires the bailor of an automobile for hire to obtain an insurance policy, providing for the payment of any final judgment for damages resulting from the negligent operation of the car by the bailee, the subrogation of the judgment creditor to the bailor's rights against insurer, and the abrogation of the rules and stipulations of the policy as a defense to an action on the policy by any other person, is invalid as an attempt to change the law on the subject of a bailor's liability, without statutory authority therefor.⁵¹

Other measures held valid include legislation authorizing the acquisition by municipal districts of parking spaces to serve the public,⁵² a statute authorizing municipalities to regulate the use of public garages,⁵³ an ordinance relating to the removal of a motor vehicle abandoned on the street and providing for recovery of the vehicle by the owner on the payment of storage charges,⁵⁴ and ordinances providing for police towing of wrecked automobiles and prohibiting a private person from doing such towing with a wrecker car, or driving a wrecker car to, or parking it at or near, the scene of an automobile accident, or soliciting business connected with the wreck on the streets or sidewalks in the vicinity.⁵⁵ Also, an ordinance limiting the number of automobiles that may be kept in a building occupied for living quarters,⁵⁶ or prohibiting the use of streets for the purpose of carrying on the business of selling or bartering of automobiles, or their storage on the streets,⁵⁷ has been held not invalid. A statute empowering a city to regulate filling stations is invalid where it is in conflict with constitutional provisions,⁵⁸ and an ordinance regulating the location of motor vehicle junk yards has been said to be not valid as an exercise of the police power unless there is an obvious and real connection between the location of such yards and one or more of the purposes for which the police power may be applied.⁵⁹

§ 718. Licenses and Taxes

Statute authorizing storage without license

A statute providing that crude petroleum or any of its products may be stored in detached and properly ventilated buildings specially adapted to the purpose, and surrounded by an embankment constructed so as effectually to prevent the overflow of the petroleum or any of its products, and, if less than a specified number of feet from other buildings, they must be separated therefrom by a stone wall of specified dimensions, has been held to authorize the erection of a filling station without a license, the underground gasoline storage tanks being regarded as "buildings" within the meaning of the statute, and, under such statute, it has been held not necessary to separate gasoline tanks less than the specified distance apart by a stone wall, the latter requirement referring only to the protection of outside property, and the fact that the owner of the property involved had mistakenly applied for a license would not estop him from proceeding with the construction of a station without a license.—*Faulkner v. this nature must be liberally construed in favor of the citizen.⁷²

Where a requirement is applicable, a person subject thereto must pay the license tax imposed thereby, notwithstanding he also conducts another business in respect of which a separate license tax is imposed.⁷³ Under power conferred on it by charter, a municipality may levy a tax on a dealer in gasoline notwithstanding he is also subject to a license tax on account of another business conducted by him,⁷⁴ as that of garage keeper.⁷⁵ However, a person may be entitled, under one state license, to conduct two or more oil and greasing stations in the same city.⁷⁶

Certificate of public convenience. Although it has been held that a statute requiring a person desiring to engage or continue in the business of leasing motor vehicles without drivers to obtain a certificate of public convenience is unconstitutional,⁷⁷ it has also been held that a home-rule city has authority to prohibit the operation of such vehicles on the streets of the city without first obtaining a certificate of public convenience and necessity.⁷⁸

§ 719. Buildings

Regulation of the erection of gasoline filling stations and public garages is within the police power of a state.

Regulation of the erection of gasoline filling stations⁷⁹ and public garages⁸⁰ is within the police power of the state, and a statute prohibiting the erection of such a filling station or garage in a designated area of a particular city is not unconstitutional;⁸¹ but a statute requiring a person desiring to erect a filling station in a residential block to obtain the written consent of the owners of two thirds of the property in such block has been held invalid.⁸² Where the erection of a public garage is regulated by statute, the statute is controlling as to conditions or limitations⁸³ and procedure for obtaining a license or permit.⁸⁴

maintenance of garages does not expressly confer a power of revocation, a permit cannot be revoked where it has been lawfully granted and acted on and the licensee has violated no law or regulation,⁸⁵ particularly in the absence of notice or hearing.⁸⁶

County zoning. In the absence of complaint by nearby property owners or proof that the addition in question would be offensive to the surrounding community, it is proper for the court to permit the completion of a small addition to an automobile repair shop in a locality zoned for agricultural purposes by a county zoning ordinance.⁸⁷

§ 720. Garage, Parking Lot, or Repair Shop as Nuisance

A garage is not a nuisance per se, even though it is a public garage and is located in a residential district; but it may be a nuisance in fact by reason of attendant circumstances and surroundings.

Since the storing of automobiles⁸⁸ and engaging in the business of storing automobiles⁸⁹ or conducting a public garage⁹⁰ are legal, a garage is not, as a general rule, considered a nuisance per se,⁹¹ or a nuisance at common law⁹² under all conditions and circumstances,⁹³ whether it be a private⁹⁴ or a public⁹⁵ garage. A garage for the accommodation of the automobiles of the occupants of a boarding house is not necessarily a nuisance.⁹⁶ The business of conducting a tire repair shop is a lawful one;⁹⁷ and such a shop may not be a nuisance per se in a particular locality.⁹⁸

As nuisances per accidens. Garages,⁹⁹ whether private¹ or public,² may be or become nuisances by reason of attendant circumstances and surroundings. Whether a particular garage is a nuisance depends on its location,³ the manner in which it is kept⁴ or conducted,⁵ and other surrounding circumstances;⁶ and, unless the fact of nuisance is admitted, it involves a question of fact⁷ to be determined according to the evidence.⁸

Lot owners, who sought to enjoin the use of adjoining owners' garage as a public garage on the ground that such use would be a nuisance, had burden of alleging and proving that the garage would be a nuisance and could be devoted to no use except one productive of a nuisance.—Griffin v. Hubbell, 11 N.E.2d 136, 212 Ind. 684.

Defendant should have opportunity of showing whether business could be so conducted that it would not be nuisance.—Pauly v. Montgomery, 228 N.W. 648, 209 Iowa 699.

Immaterial matter

Fact that plaintiff and wife were quarrelsome was immaterial in determining whether garage adjoining their home was nuisance.—Pauly v. Montgomery, supra.

Evidence held insufficient

Evidence of damages

(1) Adjoining owners are not entitled to an injunction against maintenance of garage, in absence of evi-

Character of district. A public garage located in a residential district may be or become a nuisance,⁹ as, for instance, when it interferes with the free use and enjoyment of surrounding property;¹⁰ and this is true even though the city has issued a permit to construct the garage.¹¹ Also a private garage in a residential neighborhood may be so operated as to constitute a nuisance;¹² and a tire repair shop may become a nuisance when it is conducted and maintained in a locality which is residential in character.¹³ However, the storing of automobiles is legal, and to engage in that business is legal, even though the business is located in a residential district or section;¹⁴ and, according to the weight of authority, a garage is not, and does not become, a nuisance by the mere fact that it is located in a residential district,¹⁵ even though it be a public garage.¹⁶ The establishment of a public garage in a residential district is not a nuisance per se,¹⁷ and the question whether the operation of a public garage in a residential district constitutes a nuisance is one of fact to be determined on the evidence,¹⁸ especially the evidence or lack of evidence on the question whether the storing of automobiles can be carried on at the particular place in such a way as will not unreasonably disturb those living near it.¹⁹ In at least one state a public garage in an exclusively residential district is regarded as a nuisance per se,²⁰ whether or not it is maintained in violation of a building restriction²¹ or whether or not it is an annoyance to the general community;²² and a like rule obtains as to a public parking space in such a district.²³ In such state, permission to operate a public garage in a residence district to demonstrate that no injury will be inflicted will not be granted.²⁴

A public garage located in a district devoted to business purposes has been held not to be a nuisance.²⁵ It is not a nuisance per se;²⁶ and the question whether it is a nuisance in fact depends on the proof.²⁷ However, a public garage may constitute a nuisance, even though it is located in a district which is not exclusively residential in character.²⁸ The operation of a public garage in a district which is partly commercial and partly residential may²⁹ or may not³⁰ be enjoined as a nuisance accordingly as the court determines that the attempted use does or does not constitute such interference with the rights of adjoining owners as to justify restraint.³¹ A commercial garage in a semi-business district is not a nuisance in and of itself where the garage business is carried on in the regular and ordinary way;³² and an owner of residential property in such district is not entitled to the same protection from maintenance of the garage as in a strictly residential district.³³

dence of peculiar damage from nuisance.—Polish Political Club v. Clopper, 157 N.E. 705, 260 Mass. 559.

(2) The owner of a lot adjoining a garage was entitled only to nominal damages in suit to enjoin operation and compel removal of garage where no showing was made that construction of garage lessened rental value of lot.—Wippler v. Hohn, 110 S.W.2d 409, 341 Mo. 781.

In a district which is changing to an apartment house locality, a garage connected with an apartment house is not a nuisance³⁴ per se,³⁵ but the operation thereof may become a nuisance;³⁶ under proper limitations and restrictions, it may be erected and maintained for the accommodation of the tenants of that particular apartment house³⁷ or of that apartment house and another in the same vicinity and under the same ownership,³⁸ but it should not be permitted to become a nuisance.³⁹

Garage constructed after granting of injunction. Where defendant constructed a public garage after the granting of a preliminary injunction against the use of any building on the lot as a public garage, he is not in a position to complain because of the expenditures which he made.⁴⁰

Business conducted by lessee. Where the premises are used by a lessee or sublessee as a garage and automobile repair shop, it is proper to make the lessor a party to a suit for an injunction,⁴¹ but not to include him in an order restraining, as a nuisance, the straightening of automobile bodies and fenders.⁴²

Ordering removal of garage. Although a garage is found to be a nuisance, and a statutory proceeding for its removal might be brought on behalf of a municipality, the court may not order its removal in a suit by an adjoining property owner.⁴³

§ 721. Penalties for Violation of Regulations

Liability for a penalty for violation of a statute or ordinance requiring a license or the payment of taxes for the maintenance or operation of a public garage or an automobile repair shop depends on the application of the statute or ordinance to the facts of the case.

Under a statute, penalties must be paid where automobile repair shop taxes are not paid when due;⁴⁴ but a person is not liable for a penalty, provided by ordinance for maintaining a public garage without having obtained a license to do so, where his acts, as shown by undisputed evidence, are not within the prohibition of the ordinance.⁴⁵

§ 722. Offenses by Garage Keepers

A person operating a garage is not criminally liable under a statute which is not applicable to him.

Under a statute providing that any "garage" which fails to keep a proper register of each and every material repair or change in any automobile as required in the act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, a criminal complaint does not lie for the failure to keep such register against the persons operating⁴⁶ the garage; and a person is not guilty of storing gasoline without a license where he is licensed to conduct a general automobile storage business and automobiles with some unused gasoline in their tanks are stored in his building until called for by their owners.⁴⁷ Competent and relevant evidence is admissible in a prosecution for conducting a garage business in a prohibited area.⁴⁸

§ 723. Offenses by Persons Dealing with Garage Keepers

A statute making it an offense to rent an automobile on a mileage basis fraudulently and without any intention of paying for its use is not intended to turn a criminal court into a collecting agency for the benefit of bailors for hire of automobiles.

A particular criminal statute has been construed as intended to define, and provide punishment for, a species of fraud consisting of the renting of an automobile on a mileage basis when the renter has, in fact, no intention of paying for its use,⁴⁹ and as not intended to turn a criminal court into a collecting agency for the special and exclusive benefit of bailors for hire of automobiles.⁵⁰

B. STORAGE OF VEHICLES

§ 724. In General

Ordinarily a garage keeper is a bailee for hire as to a motor vehicle which is left with, and received by, him for storage; but he is only a gratuitous bailee where he merely permits the vehicle to be placed in his garage as an accommodation. He is a warehouseman as to a vehicle in dead storage, that is, a vehicle stored for a considerable period of time, such as a season, and not kept in condition for frequent use.

The rights, duties, and liabilities of garage keepers are analogous in many respects to those of livery-stable keepers⁵¹ and parking lot proprietors.⁵² Ordinarily, where a motor vehicle is left with, and received by, a garage keeper for storage, a bailment⁵³ mutually benefiting the parties⁵⁴ is created, and the garage keeper becomes a bailee for hire;⁵⁵ but where a garage keeper permits the owner of a motor vehicle to place it in his garage as an accommodation, there being no circumstances to show that it is a bailment for hire, the bailment is merely gratuitous;⁵⁶ and, where a garage keeper has not received a motor vehicle, no bailment is created and no liability attaches to him.⁵⁷

It has been held that, where a contract for the storage of a motor vehicle in a garage obligates the owner to pay a certain rate per month and also to pay for any extras, and the taking of the automobile to and from plaintiff's residence is charged and paid for as an extra, the extra service is an incident to, and part of, the entire service, and not covered by a new contract each time it is performed.⁵⁸ Where a garage keeper has rented storage space to the owner of a motor vehicle at an agreed rental and assents to a subsequent instruction of the owner that the vehicle is not to be delivered to any person even on a written order, the special undertaking is founded on a valuable consideration.⁵⁹

Garage keeper as warehouseman; "dead" or "live" storage. As applied to the storage of automobiles in garages, "dead storage" is storage of cars not in use deposited or put away, sometimes for the season,⁶⁰ and "live storage" is the storage of cars in active daily use.⁶¹ A garage keeper who houses motor vehicles with the understanding that the owners may take them out for use at frequent intervals is not a warehouseman as to such vehicles;⁶² but he is a warehouseman as to motor vehicles which he houses on dead storage, that is, motor vehicles which he stores for the winter and which are not kept in condition for constant use.⁶³

Rental of space. Where a garage keeper contracts to furnish space for the standing of motor vehicles, furnishes keys to the owners thereof so that they can be removed at will by the owners, does not have any care of or control over, the vehicles, and does not assume to watch them, the contract with an owner is not a bailment.⁶⁴ So too, where there is a lease where a designated place in a parking lot is assigned to an automobile owner for his exclusive use without any assumption of dominion or custody of the automobile by the operator of the parking lot.⁶⁵

Duration and termination of bailment. If the bailment of a motor vehicle with a garage keeper is for a definite period, the garage keeper is bound to keep the vehicle for such period.⁶⁶ If it is for an indefinite period, he can terminate it only by notice to the bailor.⁶⁷

Mortgage or pledge of vehicle. A garage keeper holding a motor vehicle as bailee cannot apply it in payment of, or pledge it as security for, its own debt.⁶⁸ Where statutes relating to the registration of chattel mortgages and motor vehicles do not require registration by the owner of a motor vehicle when it is placed by him in storage with a garage keeper, a person taking a mortgage from the garage keeper cannot avail himself of the statutes⁶⁹ even though the garage keeper has authority to sell the vehicle.⁷⁰

§ 725. Compensation

Ordinarily the owner of a motor vehicle stored in the garage of another person is liable for storage charges. A chattel mortgagee of, or an alleged purchaser who has no title to or interest in, the vehicle is not personally liable for storage charges.

A garage proprietor with whom an automobile had originally been left for repairs and afterward for storage is entitled to a reasonable charge for storage of the car up to the time that the owner demand possession of it;⁷¹ and it is immaterial, in so far as the right to recover charges for storage after completion of repairs is concerned, whether a liability insurance company, in arranging for the repairs, acted for the owner of another vehicle with which the vehicle in question collided.⁷² The owner of the vehicle may not be liable for storage charges where the vehicle was placed in storage by a police officer⁷³ and the officer acted without legal authority.⁷⁴ On the other hand, the owner may be liable where the officer acted under a valid ordinance;⁷⁵ but where, in such case, the garage keeper used the car for personal purposes while it was in his possession the value of such use should be offset against the storage charges.⁷⁶

A chattel mortgagee of a motor vehicle is not personally liable for storage charges;⁷⁷ and an alleged purchaser is not liable where he has no title or interest, title having previously passed to another person.⁷⁸

§ 726. Injuries to, or Loss of, Vehicle

- a. In general
- b. Theft, misdelivery, or refusal to deliver
- c. Disclaimer or limitation of liability

a. In General

Although he is not an insurer of the safety of the vehicle, a garage keeper is bound to use ordinary and reasonable care to protect a motor vehicle stored in his garage under a contract of bailment for hire.

A garage keeper is not an insurer of the safety of a motor vehicle left in his care for storage,⁷⁹ but he is bound to use ordinary and reasonable care for the protection of the vehicle;⁸⁰ his failure to exercise such care is negligence,⁸¹ and he is liable for loss or damage occasioned by his negligence.⁸² The ordinary care required is that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence would take of the property, under the same or similar circumstances,⁸³ if it were his own.⁸⁴

It has been held or stated generally that the garage keeper is liable for loss of, or damage to, the vehicle only when it was caused by his negligence⁸⁵ or fault.⁸⁶ However, storage by a garage keeper of a motor vehicle in a place other than that specified in the contract for storage is a breach of the contract of bailment,⁸⁷ and for damage to the vehicle while thus stored the garage keeper is liable irrespective of the question of negligence.⁸⁸ Also, where a motor vehicle in the care of a garage keeper is damaged while being used in violation of the contract of bailment, the garage keeper is liable therefor.⁸⁹

Lack of bailment for hire. Where a motor vehicle is left with a garage keeper under circumstances making the bailment a gratuitous one, the garage keeper is liable only for losses resulting from his gross negligence.⁹⁰ Also, where there is no bailment, as where a garage keeper merely contracts to furnish space for the standing of a motor vehicle, and does not have any control over the vehicle, he is responsible only for wanton negligence.⁹¹

Effect of owner's knowledge generally. The liability of a garage keeper for injury to a motor vehicle is not affected by the owner's knowledge of the condition of the place.⁹²

Freezing. A garage keeper, to whom a motor vehicle is delivered for storage under a simple contract of bailment, is liable for damages resulting from the freezing of water in the cooling system of the vehicle while it is in storage,⁹³ especially where he expressly has agreed to maintain sufficient heat in the garage to prevent freezing,⁹⁴ or where there is an implied agreement to do so arising from the fact that the garage is steam heated.⁹⁵

Negligence of employee generally. A garage keeper who is a bailee for hire of a stored motor vehicle is liable for damage to the vehicle resulting from the negligence of his agent, servant, or employee in the performance of any duty with respect to its care or custody within the general scope of the servant's employment;⁹⁶ and, notwithstanding some decisions to the contrary,⁹⁷ the weight of authority supports the rule imposing liability where the servant has come into the possession of the property while acting within the scope of his employment, although the injury occurs while he is exceeding the scope of his employment,⁹⁸ as where he is using the vehicle for a purpose of his own.⁹⁹ If, at the time the damage is inflicted, the employee of the garage keeper is acting as agent of the owner of the vehicle, and not as agent of the garage keeper, the keeper is not liable.¹

Liability of operator of parking lot. When no bailment is created by the parking of a motor vehicle, the operator of the parking place is in general not liable to the owner of such vehicle for its loss or destruction.² At any rate, the operator of a parking lot is liable to a person parking a car therein only if he failed in the performance of a duty owing by him to such person and such failure caused injury to such person or damage to his ve-

b. Theft, Misdelivery, or Refusal to Deliver

Delivery of a motor vehicle, received by a garage keeper for storage, to a person not authorized to receive it is a breach of the contract of bailment and a conversion, irrespective of negligence or lack of negligence; but liability of the garage keeper for loss of the vehicle by theft is dependent on negligence of himself or his employee.

A garage proprietor, as a bailee for hire of a motor vehicle received by him for storage, is bound to redeliver it, on demand, to the bailor⁴ or other person entitled to the possession thereof;⁵ and he is answerable in damages for refusal to do so.⁶ Also, he is bound to see that the person to whom he delivers the vehicle is the proper person to receive it;⁷ and he is liable to the owner for a misdelivery or wrongful delivery to a stranger.⁸ While a delivery of the vehicle to a person not authorized to receive it is a breach of the bailment contract,⁹ it goes beyond that and constitutes a conversion,¹⁰ irrespective of negligence or lack of negligence.¹¹ It is generally held that the only surrender of the vehicle which the garage keeper can rightfully make is on the order of the owner,¹² express or reasonably implied,¹³ particularly where he has expressly agreed not to deliver the vehicle without an order;¹⁴ but it has also been held that the garage keeper is not justified in asking for an order from the bailor where the true owner offers to pay the lien for storage and to protect the bailee by a proper indemnity.¹⁵

Theft of vehicle. A garage keeper is liable for the loss by theft of a motor vehicle stored in his garage where he failed to use ordinary care to prevent the theft¹⁶ or to exercise reasonable diligence to recover it after it was stolen.¹⁷ On the other hand, where a stored car is stolen from the garage without negligence or connivance on the part of the garage keeper, he has been held not liable to the owner for the loss,¹⁸ even though the thief is his employee;¹⁹ the garage keeper is not an insurer against damage through theft.²⁰ The owner of the vehicle is negligent, so as to be precluded from recovering from the garage keeper for theft, where he leaves the vehicle outside the garage with the keys in the ignition and the door unlocked, contrary to the usual practice in the garage of placing keys on a shelf inside the gar-rage;²¹ but, if a motor vehicle left near the entrance of a garage is received by the garage keeper, no duty rests on its owner to lock the car or otherwise attend to its safety.²² The loss or disappearance of such essential and substantial parts of a motor vehicle as the battery and crank while in the possession of the garage keeper may amount to a conversion by him of the vehicle.²³

Articles left in vehicles. Whether a garage keeper has any duty to care for articles in vehicles received by him for storage depends on notice to him of the presence of such articles;²⁴ he is liable, where he had notice, for loss of such articles by negligent delivery to a third person not authorized to receive the vehicle and articles,²⁵ but not where he had no notice.²⁶ It has been said that, if there is notice, the garage keeper's duty rises no higher than that of a gratuitous bailee;²⁷ but, even where the bailment is regarded as gratuitous, there may nevertheless be liability for failure to take adequate measures to guard against the misdelivery which caused the loss;²⁸ and, where a bailment of baggage in the vehicle is regarded as one for hire, slight care is not sufficient.²⁹ Although he knows that the automobile is to be placed outside the garage, the owner does not assume the risk of loss of baggage in the car where the night-

man promises to watch the car and its contents.³⁰

c. Disclaimer or Limitation of Liability

In the absence of express or implied agreement by the bailor to the provisions therein, a notice posted in the garage, or printed on bills or monthly statements, which disclaims or attempts to limit liability on the part of the garage keeper is not effective to preclude or limit his liability for a loss caused by his negligence.

The rule has been laid down that a garage keeper with whom a motor vehicle is stored, being a bailee for hire, cannot by contract so limit his responsibility as not to be liable for his negligence.³¹ However, a contract for storage at the owner's risk has been upheld where the owner assumed the risk because of the lower rate and the garage keeper used the same diligence that he used in respect of his own cars.³² It has been held that a garage keeper, by posting a sign or notice in his place of business, cannot limit his liability for theft,³³ fire,³⁴ or negligence generally.³⁵ Unless the bailor's attention is called to such a sign, and he expressly or impliedly agrees to the provisions therein, he is not bound thereby.³⁶

A notice relating to liability for loss, printed on bills or monthly statements, must be read with the understanding that negligence does not cause the loss,³⁷ and it is not effective to relieve the garage keeper from liability, under its unqualified oral bailment agreement, for loss or damage occasioned by his negligence.³⁸

A stipulation in a claim check that the garage keeper will not be liable for theft is of no benefit to him where his employee took out the vehicle for his own purposes and no theft, as the term is usually understood, was committed.³⁹

§ 727. Actions

a. In general

- b. Evidence
- c. Trial
- d. Damages or amount of recovery

a. In General

The plaintiff's initial pleading in an action against a garage keeper for loss of or damage to, a stored motor vehicle is sufficient if it alleges a bailment and a breach of duty by the defendant. Where the action is based on negligence, a tender of the storage charge or a demand for the return of the property is not necessary.

A tender of the storage charge on a motor vehicle is not necessary to a recovery by the owner for the destruction of the vehicle because of a garage keeper's negligence,⁴⁰ nor is a demand for the return of the property necessary.⁴¹

Pleading. A declaration, petition, complaint, or statement of claim in an action against a garage keeper for loss of, or damage to, a motor vehicle left in his care for storage is sufficient if it shows the bailment and a breach of duty by the garage keeper,⁴² even though it is not based on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.⁴³ Where the action is brought to recover for loss of the vehicle by fire, negligence must be alleged.⁴⁴ Where defendant, in his answer, denies that the automobile was stored with him at the time of its alleged loss, a further plea, in the alternative, that, if the court finds that the car was stored with him when stolen, the theft was due to no fault or negligence on the part of himself or any of his employees is bad, as his denial of possession of the car precludes the idea of any care being bestowed on its safekeeping.⁴⁵

In an action by a garage proprietor against a third person for damages to a stored automobile from a collision which occurred while the automobile was being used by a garage employee without consent and on a mission of his own, plaintiff must allege facts showing that he has an interest in prosecuting the action.⁴⁶

In an action against a garage keeper to recover for loss of, or damage to, a motor vehicle left with him for storage, a presumption of negligence arises and a prima facie case of negligence is established when the plaintiff proves that he delivered his motor vehicle in good condition to the garage keeper and that the latter returned it in a damaged condition or failed or refused to return it on demand.

In an action against a garage keeper to recover for loss of, or damage to, a motor vehicle left with him for storage, plaintiff has the burden of establishing his contentions⁴⁷ by a preponderance of the evidence.⁴⁸ While it has been held that proof by plaintiff that he left his motor vehicle in good condition in defendant's garage and that it was in a damaged state the next morning does not make out a prima facie case⁴⁹ or cause the burden of proof to shift to defendant,⁵⁰ according to the weight of authority a presumption of negligence arises and a prima facie case of negligence is established where plaintiff proves delivery of his motor vehicle in good condition to the garage keeper and that the latter failed to produce it in a similar condition,⁵¹ or that the garage keeper failed or refused to return it on demand,⁵² or that the vehicle was stolen while in his care.⁵³

In such cases defendant has the burden of going forward with evidence of due care and lack of negligence on his part, to counteract the presumption and rebut the prima facie case,⁵⁴ and where defendant does not introduce evidence of sufficient weight to counteract and overcome the presumption, plaintiff is entitled to recover.⁵⁵ Mere proof of theft of the unreturned vehicle is not sufficient to meet the presumption⁵⁶ and overcome plaintiff's

Unrestricted burden of proof

(1) In some cases it is stated generally that defendant garage keeper has the burden of proving that the damage to the vehicle, or the failure to return the vehicle on demand, was not due to negligence or lack of ordinary care on the part of himself or his employee.

U.S.—U. S. v. Whited & Whited, D. C.Wash., 1 F.Supp. 589.

La.—Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Sutter Motor Co., 126 So. 458, 12 La.App. 495.

(2) On proof of theft, defendant's burden was not merely the burden of going forward with proof or a shifting burden, but the burden of proving to the jury that the loss did not arise from his negligence.—Harding v. Shapiro, 206 N.W. 168, 165 Minn. 248—38 C.J. p 89 note 18.

(3) Also, it has been held that garage proprietor had burden, in action by owner for damages resulting to automobile when it was delivered by proprietor's employee to unauthorized person, contrary to special contract for storage, to prove that person who took automobile had express or implied authority to receive it.—Montana Leather Co. v. Colwell, 30 P.2d 473, 96 Mont. 274.

prima facie case,⁵⁷ but defendant must go further and show that he was guilty of no negligence that would render him liable.⁵⁸

In an action to recover for storage, it will not be presumed that the ordinary nightman in charge of a public garage had implied or apparent authority to bind his employer by a contract for protracted storage at a certain rate per month.⁵⁹ The finding made or result reached in such an action should not be against the weight of the evidence.⁶⁰

Evidence held inadmissible in an action against a garage keeper for loss of, or damage to, a motor vehicle stored in his garage includes: Evidence as to notices posted about the garage, which disclaimed liability in case of loss and which are not shown to have come to the owner's attention;⁶¹ evidence that the owner carried insurance on the lost vehicle and had collected money for its loss from the insurance company;⁶² evidence of a custom in other garages;⁶³ evidence of instructions given by defendant to his watchman;⁶⁴ evidence that another automobile was stolen from the garage

two months before;⁶⁵ evidence of the failure of defendant to make a record of the return of the vehicle to the garage prior to the alleged negligence in question;⁶⁶ and evidence that the garage keeper made improvements on his premises after the loss.⁶⁷

Questions of fact, such as whether the garage keeper was negligent or exercised ordinary and reasonable care, are to be determined by the jury or other trier of facts; and where the action is tried before a jury instructions correctly stating the law applicable to the pleadings and the evidence may and should be given.

The parties are entitled to a trial where a question of fact is presented in an action.⁶⁸ Unless the evidence bearing thereon is insufficient for submission to a jury,⁶⁹ or is undisputed,⁷⁰ a question of fact should be determined by the jury, or the trial judge trying the case without a jury.⁷¹ Whether the garage keeper was negligent or exercised ordinary and reasonable care in safeguarding the vehicle is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury or other trier of facts⁷² and should not be determined as a question of law;⁷³ but the facts may be so conclusive as to make it a question for the court.⁷⁴

Instructions. Where an action against a garage keeper for the loss of, or damage to, property while in his custody is tried before a jury, the degree of care required of him should be properly defined by the instructions;⁷⁵ and the court may give correct instructions on the burden of proof;⁷⁶ but the refusal of a proper instruction is not error where the requested instruction has been substantially given in another instruction.⁷⁷ Correct instructions which are applicable to the pleadings and the evidence may be given whether the action is one to recover for the destruction of, or damage to, a stored motor vehicle⁷⁸ or is one to recover for personal injuries sustained by the owner of a stored vehicle when struck by another vehicle driven in the garage by a garage employee.⁷⁹

d. Damages or Amount of Recovery

In an action against a garage keeper for conversion of a stored motor vehicle, the full value of the vehicle at the time of the conversion is recoverable; but, in an action for damage to the vehicle, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the vehicle before and after it was damaged.

In an action against a garage keeper for damage to a motor vehicle resulting from negligence, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the vehicle before and after its injury,⁸⁰ and in estimating this difference it is proper for the jury to consider the cost and expense of repairs;⁸¹ but the damages, if any, recoverable do not include deterioration resulting from long usage or lack of use.⁸² In an action for conversion, the full value of the vehicle at the time of the conversion is recoverable.⁸³ A garage keeper's recovery of compensation for storage is subject to deduction of the amount of his recognized liability for a gas tank stolen from the vehicle while it was in storage.⁸⁴

C. REPAIRS, SERVICES, AND SUPPLIES

§ 728. Agreements in General

A person may not recover for services rendered or materials furnished in repairing a motor vehicle unless there is an express or implied agreement with the person from whom he seeks compensation; and like rules obtain as to recovery for towing the vehicle or furnishing oil and gasoline therefor.

penensation that he is to be compensated for such services or materials.⁸⁵ Where a vehicle is left for the making of specified repairs with instructions not to do any other work or furnish any other material, compensation may not be recovered for additional repairs;⁸⁶ but where the vehicle is left for whatever repairs are needed, without limitation of the amount of repairs to be made, recovery may be had for all work done and materials furnished.⁸⁷

87. La.—Wheless Auto Supply Co. v. Steinau, 127 So. 451, 13 La.App. 190.

A conditional seller of a motor vehicle is not personally liable for repairs ordered by the buyer or his assignee;⁸⁸ but where a fire loss on a truck, sold under a conditional contract reserving title in the seller, and insured by the buyer, is settled by an agreement between insurer, the seller, and the buyer, whereby the seller undertakes to make repairs, the cost to be paid by insurer, the buyer, being a party to the contract, may set up a breach by the seller in an action by the seller against him to recover the truck.⁸⁹

Written authorization. Under a statute providing that repairmen may collect only up to a stated sum for repairs where there has been no written authorization, the written authorization may be given either when the statutory limit is reached, or before the repairs are begun, or at any time the repairs up to the statutory amount are being made;⁹⁰ and it may include the items of repair, together with their cost or estimated cost, or it may include only the items of repair, or it may be an authorization to overhaul completely and provide everything new that is needed.⁹¹ The statute applies only when demand for payment is made by a repairman or automobile mechanic, and not where demand for reimbursement from the conditional buyer is made by the holder of the legal title.⁹² Where the holder of the legal title paid the full repair bill, it will be presumed that he waived the statutory requirement.⁹³

Wrecker service. It has been held that a police officer is without legal authority to employ wrecker service to pull another person's disabled automobile, standing on the side of a highway and unable to run because of defective brakes, to a private garage,⁹⁴ and that, where the automobile owner protests, the owner of the wrecker is without legal right or authority to pull such automobile to a garage.⁹⁵

Supplies. Where the loan of an automobile creates a bailment for the benefit of the bailee, the bailee may not pledge the bailor's credit or make him responsible for the payment of a bill for oil and gasoline.⁹⁶

§ 729. Nature of Bailment

A bailment is created when a motor vehicle is delivered by its owner or custodian to, and is accepted by, another person for repairs or servicing; and ordinarily the bailment is one for hire or for mutual benefit.

A bailment is created when a motor vehicle is delivered by its owner or custodian to, and is accepted by, another person for repairs⁹⁷ or servicing;⁹⁸ and, as bailee, the person with whom the vehicle is left occupies the position of an independent contractor⁹⁹ whose negligence is not imputable to the bailor.¹ While, where one receives a motor vehicle from the owner to repair it gratuitously, the bailment is one for the sole benefit of the bailor,² a repairman to whom a motor vehicle is intrusted for repairs is ordinarily a bailee for hire³ or for mutual benefit,⁴ as is a manufacturer to whom the vehicle is returned for repairs;⁵ and where the repairs have been completed and the property is being held until the owner can call for it the bailment remains simply one for mutual benefit.⁶

§ 730. Care as to Repairs, Services, or Supplies

Ordinarily a bailee of a motor vehicle intrusted to him for repairs may have the work done by another person; but he is bound to have the work done with ordinary care and skill, and he is liable for damages to the vehicle caused by carelessness and negligence in making the repairs.

A bailee of a motor vehicle intrusted to him for repairs is required to do the work contracted for, or to have it done, with ordinary care, skill, and judgment⁷ and with the use of a degree of diligence, attention, and skill adequate to the performance of his undertaking.⁸ He may use the usual means of executing the bailment,⁹ and, unless the contract requires his personal services, he may have the work completed by third persons;¹⁰ but where he takes a repair job involving some work which he does not have facilities to perform, his undertaking covers the entire job so far as the customer is concerned;¹¹ and his duty is not limited to the selection of competent employees¹² or to the employment of a competent person to do work which is outside the capacity of his shop.¹³ He is liable for damage to the vehicle caused by the carelessness and negligence of himself or his employee in making the repairs.¹⁴ However, there is no liability for an explosion resulting from the application of a welding torch to the outside of a tank trailer used in transporting gasoline where the repairs to be made require welding and the employees are informed by a representative of the owner of the vehicle that the tank has been steamed.¹⁵

Services and supplies. A person receiving a motor vehicle for washing assumes, as a bailee for hire, the obligation to use due care in the performance of the services required.¹⁶ The failure of a person to put alcohol in the radiator of a motor vehicle as he has agreed to do is negligence rendering him liable for the damages resulting from the subsequent freezing of water in the radiator.¹⁷

§ 731. Care and Custody of Vehicle

A repairman with whom a motor vehicle is left for repairs under a bailment for mutual benefit or for hire is not an insurer of the safety of the vehicle, but is required to use ordinary and reasonable care in safeguarding it, and is liable to the owner for loss of, or damage to, the vehicle resulting from his negligent acts or omissions.

As a bailee, a repairman with whom a motor vehicle is left for repairs has not only the possession and control, but also the exclusive right of possession, of the vehicle.¹⁸ Where the bailment is one for mutual benefit or for hire, the repairman is, in the absence of a contractual limitation of liability,¹⁹ required to use ordinary care and diligence in safeguarding the vehicle,²⁰ that is, such care and diligence as a capable and reasonably prudent person engaged in the same business is accustomed to exercise,²¹ and is liable to the owner for loss of, or damage to, the vehicle resulting from his negligent acts or omissions²² or those of his agents or employees while acting within the scope of their employment.²³ Likewise, a person receiving a motor vehicle for washing or other servicing is required to exercise ordinary and reasonable care in safeguarding it.²⁴ A repairman is, however, required to use only ordinary and reasonable care for the safekeeping of the vehicle²⁵ and is not liable for loss or damage if such care has been exercised;²⁶ he is not an insurer of the safety of the vehicle.²⁷

Unless he is an ostensible principal,²⁸ a person not actually engaged in the business of repairing or servicing motor vehicles is not liable for damages to a motor vehicle resulting from the negligent operation thereof by a person who is not his employee, but to whom the vehicle was intrusted by the owner for repairs or services.²⁹

Theft or unauthorized use by employee. Where an automobile during the continuance of a bailment for repairs is stolen by a servant of the repairman, the repairman may be liable where he has failed to exercise due care in the selection of the servant;³⁰ and failure to protect a vehicle, left for repairs or service, from unauthorized use by employees may impose liability for damage to the vehicle while being so used.³¹

Where the bailment is for the sole benefit of the bailor, as where one receives a motor vehicle from the owner to repair it gratuitously, he is required only to exercise slight care and is liable only for gross neglect or bad faith.³²

Conversion. No act of a repairman in dismantling a motor vehicle or making alterations therein is in any sense a conversion where everything he does while acting under the directions of the registered owner of the vehicle is lawful and within the terms of his contract of employment.³³ Even though repairs are made without the owner's consent, there is no conversion where the acts are done in subordination to the owner's title and without altering the structure, appearance, or usefulness of the vehicle.³⁴

§ 732. — Notice Affecting Liability

Posting or otherwise giving notice that he will not be liable does not relieve a repairman from liability for a loss occasioned by his lack of ordinary care.

The liability of one in whose custody an automobile was left for repairs as a bailee for hire is not affected by knowledge of the owner as to the manner in which or the place where the property was kept.³⁵ A repairman or serviceman cannot avoid liability for a loss occasioned by lack of ordinary care on his part by having posted a notice,³⁶ or by having given notice to the owner,³⁷ that he will not be liable, as, for example, where the vehicle is destroyed by fire³⁸ or is stolen.³⁹

The duty of a repairman to care for articles in a vehicle left with him for repairs depends on notice to him of the presence of such articles.⁴⁰

§ 733. — Use of Vehicle in Testing Repairs

A repairman may be liable for destruction of, or damage to, a motor vehicle resulting from the negligence of his employee while driving the vehicle to ascertain whether the repairs have been successfully made.

The repairman may be liable for destruction of, or damage to, the vehicle resulting from the negligence of an employee while driving the vehicle for the purpose of ascertaining whether the repairs have been successfully made,⁴¹ even though the test is made at the request of the owner;⁴² and the fact that the test is not properly made or is unduly extended will not necessarily have the effect of taking the acts of the employee out of the scope of his employment.⁴³ However, recovery may not be had for damage to the vehicle in a collision while it is being tested if the collision is due to any other cause than the employee's negligence, such as the fault of the driver of the other vehicle;⁴⁴ and, obviously, where a vehicle, left for greasing, is wrecked while being tested by an employee to ascertain whether squeaks have been removed, recovery may not be had on the ground that the employer has negligently permitted the vehicle to be stolen.⁴⁵ In the case of a bailment for the sole benefit of the bailor, as where one receives a motor vehicle from the owner to repair it gratuitously, he is required only to exercise slight care, and is liable only for gross neglect or bad faith where the vehicle is damaged while it is being operated for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the repairs have been successfully made.⁴⁶

§ 734. — Redelivery to Owner

A person with whom a motor vehicle is left for repairs or services is obligated to return it to the bailor or his authorized representative or show a good excuse for failure to do so.

An essential element of every contract of bailment of a motor vehicle for repairs or services is the agreement of the bailee to return the vehicle to the bailor or his authorized representative;⁴⁷ and this is true where the motor vehicle is received for the purpose of making repairs if ordered by the owner after ascertainment of their nature and extent.⁴⁸ So, when called on for the return of the vehicle, it is the duty of the repairman or serviceman to deliver it to the owner or to excuse his failure to do so,⁴⁹ as by showing that it has been

In Texas

(1) The text rule has been followed by the commission of appeals on the ground that the language of the posted sign is subject to a strict construction and, while it purports to exempt the bailee from liability for loss due to particular causes other than the negligence of the bailee, it does not in express terms provide for the exemption of the bailee from the obligation, inhering in the bailment contract, to exercise ordinary care to prevent the theft of the automobile—Langford v. Nevin, 298 S.W. 536, 117 Tex. 130.

(2) In an earlier case, it was held by the court of civil appeals that where the owner of the motor vehicle had actual knowledge of the sign and left the vehicle with the distinct understanding on his part that the repairman would not be liable for loss of the vehicle by theft, the repairman was not liable unless the theft was occasioned by his gross negligence—Munger Automobile Co. v. stolen without negligence on his part.⁶⁰

Time for return. The repairman is liable in damages where he fails to return the vehicle within the specified time agreed on, and refuses thereafter to return the vehicle notwithstanding repeated demands, and the owner is compelled to sue to obtain possession;⁵¹ but keeping an automobile overnight, instead of returning it the same day as he promised to do, does not render the repairman liable for the loss of the automobile by theft without negligence on his part.⁵²

Place of return. If the place of return is designated therein, the contract of bailment is not completely performed until a delivery at the designated place has been made.⁵³ If the contract of bailment does not, by its express or implied terms, fix the place of return, the vehicle must be kept ready for delivery, when called for, in the garage or shop where it was deposited or some other appropriate place,⁵⁴ and must be delivered at such place on demand.⁵⁵ The bailee is under no obligation to make delivery elsewhere;⁵⁶ in the absence of a custom or contract, he is under no obligation to redeliver the repaired or serviced motor vehicle to the owner at his residence or place of business.⁵⁷ However, a mere offer to return an automobile after it has been repaired or serviced does not effect a redelivery if the car is then so situated that it cannot be repossessed by the bailor and taken away by the exercise of reasonable driving ability and skill;⁵⁸ and, in such case, unless the bailor waives his right to a proper return, it is the duty of the bailee to move the car to a proper place or by other means make it ready for redelivery.⁵⁹

Bailor's lack of liability for injuries
Where at time charging of fire truck's battery was finished, custodian of truck was unable to drive it

§ 735. — Delivery of Vehicle to Person Not Authorized to Receive It

A repairman's delivery of a motor vehicle to a person not authorized to receive it constitutes a conversion.

A delivery of the motor vehicle by the repairman to one who is without authority to receive it constitutes a conversion.⁶⁰ However, where the repairman is without notice of the rights of others in the vehicle, he will be discharged from liability by a redelivery thereof to the person from whom he receives it,⁶¹ and this notwithstanding he has given such person a nonnegotiable receipt which is not surrendered on a redelivery of the vehicle.⁶² Also, where a universal custom is established that, in the absence of orders to the contrary from the owner, delivery of a motor vehicle to the owner's chauffeur constitutes delivery to the owner, it will be presumed that, on delivery of a car to a repairman, both parties know of such custom and contract accordingly.⁶³ It is not a breach of duty for the repairman to deliver the vehicle to his own employee where, under the circumstances, such employee is, for the purpose of delivery, not his agent, but is instead the agent of the owner or of a garageman whom the owner expressly made his agent for the purpose of having the repairs made.⁶⁴

§ 736. Compensation

In the absence of an agreement as to the amount of compensation, fair and reasonable compensation is recoverable for repairs to a motor vehicle; but, if the amount is fixed by contract, the contract price, less the cost of the labor necessary to complete the repairs where the defendant has prevented completion, may be recovered.

Where services are rendered and materials fur-from repair shop of garage because repair shop was filled with automobiles, and asked repairman to take fire truck out, and repairman in driving truck out of garage injured third person, custodian of truck was not liable for injuries, since there was no redelivery of automobile to custodian and repairman was still acting as independent contractor.—Daigle v. Pelletier, supra.

nished without agreement as to the amount of compensation therefor, the repairman or serviceman is entitled to recover such compensation as is fair and reasonable⁶⁵ in view of his skill and equipment.⁶⁶ In case the price of repairs is fixed by contract, the measure of recovery, where defendant takes the vehicle away when the repairs are partially made and refuses to return it for completion of the repairs, is the contract price less the cost of the labor necessary to complete the repairs.⁶⁷ Where the repairs are not satisfactorily made within a reasonable time, it is proper for the owner, in paying for the repairs, to deduct the loss in value of the vehicle.⁶⁸

Repairman's failure to notify owner of a fire which damaged owner's vehicle while it was in repairman's shop does not preclude recovery for the repairs necessary when the vehicle was brought to the shop where the fire damage has been wholly repaired without expense to the owner.⁶⁹

A tender of the amount due for automobile repairs does not discharge the debt.⁷⁰

Excessive payment. Where the repairman compels the owner to submit to an illegal exaction in order to recover possession of the vehicle, the doctrine of duress of goods applies,⁷¹ and as much of the payment as is excessive may be recovered,⁷² or if, in order to recover possession of the vehicle the owner has given a check for more than the repairman is entitled to, the repairman cannot recover on such check,⁷³ without regard to whether his excessive demand was for the purpose of defrauding the owner⁷⁴ or whether or not it was made in good faith.⁷⁵

§ 737. — Set-Off and Counterclaim

A cross demand for damages may be made in an action to recover for repairs; and the plaintiff is not entitled to recover where the defendant's damages from the unskilled and unworkmanlike manner in which the repairs were made equal or exceed the amount claimed by the plaintiff.

In an action to recover a sum alleged to be due for repairs to a motor vehicle, made by plaintiff, there can be no recovery where, by reason of the unskilled and unworkmanlike manner in which the repairs were made, defendant has been damaged in an amount equal to, or greater than, the amount claimed by plaintiff.⁷⁶ Defendant is not estopped to set up a cross demand for damages in an action for work and labor by the fact that he has made partial payments for the repairs.⁷⁷

§ 738. — Pleading, Evidence, and Trial

In order to recover for work done and materials furnished in repairing a motor vehicle, the plaintiff must plead and prove a cause of action. The existence of facts as to which the evidence is conflicting, and which facts are not conclusively established is to be determined by the jury or other trier of facts.

In an action to recover for work done and materials furnished in repairing a motor vehicle, it is incumbent on plaintiff to plead⁷⁸ and prove⁷⁹ a cause of action. However, where a contract provides that plaintiff is to be paid for repairing used automobiles only from the excess of the sale price over the trade-in price, and defendant prevented sales by wrongfully taking repaired automobiles from plaintiff, plaintiff, when seeking recovery on the promise implied by law to pay the value of the benefits received from the repairs, instead of seeking recovery on the contract, need not allege and prove that the automobiles could have been sold for a price in excess of the trade-in price.⁸⁰ Competent and relevant evidence is admissible.⁸¹

Questions of law and fact. On conflicting evidence, questions as to what was the contract price⁸² and whether the repairs have been made in a satisfactory manner⁸³ are to be determined as questions of fact by the jury, or by the trial judge where the trial is before him without a jury. Also, it is for the jury to say what is a reasonable price where, although there was a contract price, recovery is sought on a quantum meruit.⁸⁴ An agreement to put a truck in first class condition is not so indefinite as to require the submission of its construction to the jury.⁸⁵

The evidence in the case may be sufficient to raise questions of fact for the jury and not be so conclusive as to warrant the direction of a verdict for plaintiff on his claim;⁸⁶ but in the absence of any evidence to substantiate defendant's counterclaim it is not error to direct a verdict for plaintiff on such counterclaim.⁸⁷

§ 739. Actions against Repairman or Serviceman for Conversion, Loss, or Damage; Personal Injuries

- b. Personal injuries

a. Actions for Loss or Conversion of, or Damage to, Vehicle

- (1) In general
- (2) Pleading
- (3) Evidence
- (4) Trial, judgment, and appeal

(1) In General

In an action against him for loss or conversion of a motor vehicle, a repairman may not defend on the ground that title to the vehicle is in a third person or that the owner is insured. The circumstances may be such that a demand for return of the property is not essential to maintenance of the action.

It is no defense in an action against a repairman for the loss of a vehicle that the owner is insured,⁸⁸ and an insurer who has paid the loss occasioned to the owner may sue in his own right.⁸⁹ Also, in an action for conversion, he may not assert the title of a third person as a defense;⁹⁰ and under some statutes he may not assert a lien for repairs as a defense where he has not commenced an action to foreclose the lien.⁹¹ The contributory negligence of plaintiff's wife in remaining in the vehicle, and of plaintiff in permitting her to do so, is not a defense to an action for damage to the vehicle resulting from the falling of the vehicle from an elevating rack.⁹²

A demand for the return of the property is not essential to the maintenance of a suit in trover for a motor vehicle left with a garage keeper for repairs, where defendant denied having received the vehicle, claimed title thereto, and sold the property.⁹³

(2) Pleading

In an action against a repairman for loss of, or damage to, a motor vehicle in his custody, it is necessary for the plaintiff to allege facts constituting a cause of action and to support necessary allegations by proof; but he need not allege due care on his part.

In an action by the owner to recover for damage to a motor vehicle while it was in the custody of defendant repairman, there is no necessity for an allegation of due care on the part of plaintiff.⁹⁴ While it has been held that the owner of the vehicle must allege negligence,⁹⁵ there is some support for the view that an allegation of negligence, although made, is unnecessary where the vehicle was delivered in good condition to defendant for repairs or services and was returned in a damaged condition.⁹⁶ It is not necessary to allege a tender of charges where the pleading does not admit that charges are due.⁹⁷

Recoupment. In an action for conversion on the ground that the vehicle has been kept for an unreasonable time, an amendment to defendant's answer seeking to recoup an amount claimed to be due defendant for work and repairs made on the vehicle in question is properly rejected.⁹⁸

Issues and proof. Plaintiff is required,⁹⁹ or not required,¹ to prove negligence accordingly as it is considered necessary or unnecessary for him to allege it. Where defendant does not plead that the action is not prosecuted by the real party in interest, it is proper to exclude evidence that plaintiff carried insurance on his vehicle and has been fully indemnified by insurer for damage to the vehicle.²

(3) Evidence

Proof that the plaintiff's motor vehicle was delivered in good condition to the defendant for repairs or services and was returned in a damaged condition, or was not returned on demand, establishes a prima facie case and casts on the defendant the burden of going forward with the evidence.

In an action to recover for loss of, or damage to, a motor vehicle left with defendant for repairs or services, the burden of proof as to negligence rests on plaintiff.³ Where proof is made that the vehicle was delivered in good condition to defendant and was returned in a damaged condition, or was not returned on demand, a presumption of liability arises⁴ and a prima facie case is established;⁵ and the burden of going forward with the evidence is then cast on defendant.⁶ A presumption of liability may be overcome by a showing that the loss was caused by accident;⁷ and it has been held that, where it is proved that the vehicle was destroyed by fire⁸ or lost by theft,⁹ plaintiff has the burden of proving that the fire or theft was the result of defendant's negligence or failure to exercise ordinary care; but it has also been held that proof of destruction of, or damage to, the vehicle by fire does not relieve defendant of the burden of going forward with evidence that he exercised proper care.¹⁰

In absence of other evidence, a concession that the vehicle was destroyed or damaged by fire does not preclude recovery.—Threlkeld v. Breaux Ballard, Inc., 177 S.W.2d 157, 296 Ky. 344, 151 A.L.R. 708.

In a suit for breach of warranty of services and materials used in repairing an automobile, plaintiff has the burden of establishing the breach.¹¹

Res ipsa loquitur. Where the evidence showed that the repairman permitted an elevator to fall, whereby the vehicle was injured, and he introduced no evidence to explain the falling of the elevator, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied;¹² but where an automobile intrusted to defendant for washing was, for that purpose, driven up an incline twenty feet long to a level surface forty inches above the ground, and afterward was found to be damaged, and there was no showing of negligence aside from accident except testimony that high motor speed could cause the damage, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was not applicable.¹³ Where the res ipsa doctrine is applicable in the case of damage by fire, defendant, although not required to show the cause of the fire,¹⁴ is obliged to produce all the evidence available in order to exculpate himself from the implication of negligence.¹⁵

Admissibility. The general rules as to the admissibility of evidence in civil actions apply in determining the admissibility of evidence in actions against a repairman for loss of, or injury to, a motor vehicle left in his hands for repairs.¹⁶ A bailor may be permitted to give testimony that the vehicle bailed was complete and all right in every way as against an objection that it is a statement of a conclusion.¹⁷ On the other hand, a witness who has stated that a vulcanizer is the best made should not be allowed to state how it is generally regarded in the automobile business,¹⁸ or whether it is customary to leave a vulcanizer unattended,¹⁹ although he may be asked on cross-examination whether the placing of a vulcanizing department against an elevator shaft was placing it at the most dangerous point for the communication of fire.²⁰

Weight and sufficiency. General rules are applicable in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence in an action against a person with whom a motor vehicle was left for repairs or services to recover for loss of, or damage to, the vehicle²¹ or for loss of, or damage to, another vehicle

Where fire was of limited nature, rather than a general conflagration, as where it was confined to the vehicle in question while such vehicle was in the control and possession of defendant or his employees, the bailee must absolve himself from negligence causing the fire.—*Gulf Ins. (4) Trial, Judgment, and Appeal

Where an action to recover for loss or conversion of, or damage to, a motor vehicle intrusted to the defendant for repairs or services is tried before a jury, controverted questions of fact should be submitted to, and determined by, the jury under appropriate instructions by the court. If special findings are made, a judgment for the plaintiff should not be rendered unless it is supported by such findings.

Controverted questions of fact are to be determined by the jury or trial court where the trial is without a jury,²³ as, for example, defendant's negligence,²⁴ the reasonableness of time for completion of repairs,²⁵ or the existence of a universal custom recognizing delivery to the owner's chauffeur as delivery to the owner,²⁶ or of a custom to send out for painting automobiles left for repair.²⁷ On the other hand, the case, or particular issues therein, should not be submitted to the jury where the evidence is not sufficient for that purpose;²⁸ and where the facts are undisputed the court may and should either direct a verdict for plaintiff²⁹ or hold as a matter of law that he has failed to establish a sufficient basis for recovery.³⁰

Instructions to the jury should define ordinary care, where defendant was obliged to exercise such care;³¹ and they may and should conform to, and be warranted by, the pleadings and evidence.³²

It is not error to refuse a requested instruction which is incorrect.³³

Findings and judgment. An affirmative finding on a special issue as to whether defendant repairman had promised to pay plaintiff the value of the automobile burned, and the finding as to the value of the car, has been held sufficient to sustain a judgment for such value against defendant, regardless of whether plaintiff had been prevented from removing the car before the fire by the dismantling of the car and making more extensive repairs than authorized;³⁴ but, in an action for the value of accessories in an automobile delivered to defendants for repairing, the affirmative answer of the jury to the question whether defendants or anyone else removed the accessories from the car does not sustain a judgment for plaintiff, since the finding does not establish that defendants, or anyone for whom they were responsible, removed the accessories.³⁵

On appeal and trial de novo in an action originating before a justice of the peace, an amendment of plaintiff's pleading may be allowed where the cause of action is not changed thereby.³⁶ It will not be presumed, in order to support a judgment for plaintiff on a special verdict in an action for the value of automobile accessories removed from

Actionable negligence must be established to warrant a recovery against a repairman or serviceman for personal injuries.

Actionable negligence must be established to warrant a recovery against a repairman or serviceman for personal injuries sustained while a motor vehicle was being repaired or serviced.³⁸ Contributory negligence is a defense;³⁹ and, although the repairman or serviceman is bound to exercise ordinary care not to injure the owner of an automobile being repaired or serviced⁴⁰ while such owner retains the status of an invitee, which he had when he entered on the premises, by being in a part of the premises where he is expected to be,⁴¹ the repairman or serviceman or his employee has no duty to warn the owner of an obvious danger,⁴² and where the owner is standing in a place where he is not an invitee, the only duty owing to him is to refrain from willful or reckless misconduct toward him.⁴³

Provided the evidence bearing thereon is sufficient for submission to the jury,⁴⁴ and is not so conclusive as to make the questions matters of law,⁴⁵ the questions of negligence⁴⁶ and contributory negligence⁴⁷ are to be determined by the jury under proper instructions by the court.⁴⁸

Injuries sustained after making of repairs. Recovery may be had against a repairman for personal injuries sustained after the making of repairs to a motor vehicle where the declaration, petition, or complaint states a cause of action⁴⁹ and it is established by the evidence that the repairman or his employee was negligent in making the repairs⁵⁰ and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the accident.⁵¹ Plaintiff has the burden of proving causal relationship between the alleged negligent repair and the subsequent accident,⁵² and this burden does not shift;⁵³ but it is not essential that the connection of cause and effect be established with absolute certainty.⁵⁴ Contributory negli-

Both negligence and causal connection between negligence and accident must be shown by plaintiff; and no recovery may be had where the evidence leaves the cause of the accident in the realm of speculation and conjecture.—Vardolos v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 246 N.W. 467, 188 Minn. 25.

Admissibility of evidence

In action for injuries sustained by automobile owner when automobile tipped over as owner was attempting to enter it at mechanic's request while it was in an unbalanced position upon a hydraulic hoist, evidence that owner, two or three weeks before, had at request of same mechanic safely entered automobile when it was at same elevation on same hoist was admissible; but evidence of garage rules directing mechanics to prohibit any one from entering an automobile elevated on hoist was properly excluded as not binding on owner, who had no knowledge of rules.—Bisping v. § 740. — Damages

The measure of damages for the loss or destruction of a motor vehicle while in the custody of a repairman is its value at the date of loss; and the measure of damages for making repairs improperly is the difference between the value of the vehicle if it had been repaired in compliance with the contract and its value in its defective condition, or the cost of putting it in the required condition if such cost is less than the difference in value.

Where a motor vehicle is lost or destroyed while in the hands of a repairman through his fault, the measure of damages is its value at the date of the loss;⁵⁶ but if the owner sues the one to whom the repairman misdelivers it and recovers for its conversion, and thereafter sues the repairman, the repairman is entitled to credit for the amount recovered, less the expenses of the litigation.⁵⁷ Where repairs are improperly made, although the work done is of some value, and the owner must of necessity retain it, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the motor vehicle as it would have been if it had been repaired in compliance with the contract and its value in its defective condition,⁵⁸ unless the cost of putting it into the condition required by the contract is less than the difference in value, in which case such cost furnishes the measure of damages.⁵⁹

§ 741. Actions by Repairman for Conversion or Damage; Personal Injuries

A repairman who is liable to the owner for a misdelivery of a motor vehicle to a person not authorized to receive it may sue the person causing the misdelivery for the damages sustained; and where a repairman received personal injuries, due to the negligence of a customer, while repairing the customer's motor vehicle, he may, on adequate evidence, recover from the customer.

A repairman who has become liable to the owner

because of a misdelivery of the vehicle left in his charge to an unauthorized person may maintain an action against the person causing such misdelivery for the damages sustained by his wrongful act,⁶⁰ and, if he sues by agreement with the owner or bailor, he holds any amount recovered by him in excess of the special injury which he has sustained in trust for the owner or bailor.⁶¹ In such an action evidence is properly admitted to show the arrangement under which plaintiff had possession of the vehicle.⁶²

Personal injuries. Unless precluded by contributory negligence⁶³ or assumption of risk,⁶⁴ a repairman may, on adequate evidence, recover from a customer for personal injuries sustained while repairing the customer's motor vehicle and resulting from the negligence of the customer,⁶⁵ as where the customer knew of the defect causing the injury and failed to give warning thereof.⁶⁶ However, the owner of an automobile does not owe to a repairman the duty to make an expert examination, before delivering the automobile for repairs, to discover any defect in the mechanism which may render it unsafe or dangerous,⁶⁷ and he is not liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of another person assisting, and working under the control and direction of, the repairman.⁶⁸

§ 742. — Damages

Where, after its misdelivery by a repairman, a motor vehicle was wrecked, the repairman is entitled to recover from the person causing the misdelivery the fair market value of the vehicle at the time of the conversion, but not the expenses and disbursements incurred in defense of the owner's action against him.

D. LIEN

A garage keeper's lien attaches as soon as any sum becomes due, that is, when the work is begun, not when the contract is made.

A lien in favor of a garage keeper may be created by the express agreement of the parties;⁷² but the lien has also been said to be not a matter of contract but of statute law,⁷³ and to be not of the right but of the remedy.⁷⁴ A claim in the nature of a garage keeper's lien has been said to give claimant a special property in the articles covered.⁷⁵

A garage keeper's lien had been held to attach as soon as any sum becomes due,⁷⁶ or when the work is begun, not when the contract is made.⁷⁷ It has been said of a particular statutory lien that it is effective immediately,⁷⁸ and, with respect to another, that the repairman's rights are governed as of the time possession is given to him.⁷⁹

§ 744. Statutory Provisions

Statutory provisions creating or governing garage

keeper's or repairman's liens on motor vehicles have been construed and applied in accordance with the general rules of statutory construction.

A garage keeper's statutory lien on a motor vehicle has been held only a right in rem against the property itself,⁸⁰ and, in effect, subjects the chattel to an encumbrance as security for the principal debt.⁸¹ A statute conferring a lien on the keepers of livery or boarding stables will not be construed to confer a lien in behalf of the keeper of a garage for motor vehicles.⁸² A corporation⁸³ or a firm⁸⁴ has been held entitled to the statutory lien, the same as a natural person.

Construction generally. A statute conferring a lien for work or repairs done by a garage keeper has been required to be strictly construed in determining to whom and for what a lien is given,⁸⁵ since it confers special privileges.⁸⁶ Likewise, provisions in derogation of the common law are required to be strictly construed;⁸⁷ but at the same time such an enactment, in its remedial aspect, has been required to be liberally construed in furtherance of the beneficial purpose intended.⁸⁸ Where the statute conferring a lien is declaratory of the common law, it is to be interpreted according to the common-law rules.⁸⁹ A statute giving a lien on a motor vehicle for repairs or supplies furnished must be read and construed in the light of the law in force when it was passed.⁹⁰

Effect of statutes on common-law lien. A common-law lien for repairs is not superseded or destroyed by a statute creating a new and additional remedy to enforce it;⁹¹ but, as discussed infra § 758, a statute which provides the manner in which the common-law lien may be enforced is repealed by a statute which creates a lien and prescribes the method for its enforcement.

Effect of special statutes upon general statutory lien. While it has been held that a statute specifically relating to liens on motor vehicles supercedes or controls a general statute which does not specifically refer to such vehicles, although it contains language broad enough to cover them,⁹² it has also been held that a statutory lien similar to a common-law lien for repairs dependent on possession may be had, notwithstanding provision is made by another statute for a lien on motor vehicles which is not dependent on possession but is to be preserved by the filing of a statement of claim with the proper officer.⁹³

Power to incur obligation. The lien conferred by statute is based on the legal obligation of the owner of the motor vehicle to pay;⁹⁴ hence, where an infant's contract for services involving his automobile is not binding on him, the garage keeper has no enforceable lien under statute.⁹⁵

§ 745. Right of Owner to Lien

In particular circumstances, the owner of a motor vehicle has been held not to have a repairman's lien thereon.

The owner of a motor vehicle who has contracted to sell it, reserving title in himself until the purchase price is paid, cannot have a mechanic's lien on the motor vehicle for repairs made at the request of the purchaser who is in possession of the property;⁹⁶ and the owner's act in retaining possession of the vehicle, if equivocal, will be referred to the exercise of a right under the sale contract rather than a right by virtue of a common-law lien,⁹⁷ precluding him, after repossessing the property, from subjecting the purchaser to liability for the unpaid purchase price.⁹⁸ A dealer taking a motor vehicle with knowledge of an outstanding conditional sales contract requiring the buyer to keep it in repair acquires no lien against himself for repairs made by him.⁹⁹

§ 746. Agreement or Consent of Owner

- a. In general
- b. Conditional sales contracts

a. In General

The general rule is that for a garage keeper's or repairman's lien to arise on a motor vehicle the work must have been done, or the supplies or storage furnished, by contract with, or authority of, the owner.

While the existence of a valid common-law lien for the value of labor and material used in the repair of a motor vehicle cannot be denied by the person at whose instance the service was rendered, or on behalf of any interest for which he was then authorized to act,¹ in order to lay the foundation for a common-law lien for repairs, supplies, or storage, it must appear that the work was done, or the supplies or storage furnished, by contract with, or by authority of, the owner,² and the same is true

A garage keeper's lien attaches as soon as any sum becomes due, that is, when the work is begun, not when the contract is made.

A lien in favor of a garage keeper may be created by the express agreement of the parties;⁷² but the lien has also been said to be not a matter of contract but of statute law,⁷³ and to be not of the right but of the remedy.⁷⁴ A claim in the nature of a garage keeper's lien has been said to give claimant a special property in the articles covered.⁷⁵

A garage keeper's lien had been held to attach as soon as any sum becomes due,⁷⁶ or when the work is begun, not when the contract is made.⁷⁷ It has been said of a particular statutory lien that it is effective immediately,⁷⁸ and, with respect to another, that the repairman's rights are governed as of the time possession is given to him.⁷⁹

§ 744. Statutory Provisions

Statutory provisions creating or governing garage

keeper's or repairman's liens on motor vehicles have been construed and applied in accordance with the general rules of statutory construction.

A garage keeper's statutory lien on a motor vehicle has been held only a right in rem against the property itself,⁸⁰ and, in effect, subjects the chattel to an encumbrance as security for the principal debt.⁸¹ A statute conferring a lien on the keepers of livery or boarding stables will not be construed to confer a lien in behalf of the keeper of a garage for motor vehicles.⁸² A corporation⁸³ or a firm⁸⁴ has been held entitled to the statutory lien, the same as a natural person.

Construction generally. A statute conferring a lien for work or repairs done by a garage keeper has been required to be strictly construed in determining to whom and for what a lien is given,⁸⁵ since it confers special privileges.⁸⁶ Likewise, provisions in derogation of the common law are required to be strictly construed;⁸⁷ but at the same time such an enactment, in its remedial aspect,

has been required to be liberally construed in furtherance of the beneficial purpose intended.⁸⁸ Where the statute conferring a lien is declaratory of the common law, it is to be interpreted according to the common-law rules.⁸⁹ A statute giving a lien on a motor vehicle for repairs or supplies furnished must be read and construed in the light of the law in force when it was passed.⁹⁰

Effect of statutes on common-law lien. A common-law lien for repairs is not superseded or destroyed by a statute creating a new and additional remedy to enforce it;⁹¹ but, as discussed infra § 758, a statute which provides the manner in which the common-law lien may be enforced is repealed by a statute which creates a lien and prescribes the method for its enforcement.

Effect of special statutes upon general statutory lien. While it has been held that a statute specifically relating to liens on motor vehicles supercedes or controls a general statute which does not specifically refer to such vehicles, although it contains language broad enough to cover them,⁹² it has also been held that a statutory lien similar to a common-law lien for repairs dependent on possession may be had, notwithstanding provision is made by another statute for a lien on motor vehicles which is not dependent on possession but is to be preserved by the filing of a statement of claim with the proper officer.⁹³

Power to incur obligation. The lien conferred by statute is based on the legal obligation of the owner of the motor vehicle to pay;⁹⁴ hence, where an infant's contract for services involving his automobile is not binding on him, the garage keeper has no enforceable lien under statute.⁹⁵

§ 745. Right of Owner to Lien

In particular circumstances, the owner of a motor vehicle has been held not to have a repairman's lien thereon.

The owner of a motor vehicle who has contracted to sell it, reserving title in himself until the purchase price is paid, cannot have a mechanic's lien on the motor vehicle for repairs made at the request of the purchaser who is in possession of the property;⁹⁶ and the owner's act in retaining possession of the vehicle, if equivocal, will be referred to the exercise of a right under the sale contract rather than a right by virtue of a common-law lien,⁹⁷ precluding him, after repossessing the property, from subjecting the purchaser to liability for the unpaid purchase price.⁹⁸ A dealer taking a motor vehicle with knowledge of an outstanding conditional sales contract requiring the buyer to keep it in repair acquires no lien against himself for repairs made by him.⁹⁹

§ 746. Agreement or Consent of Owner

- a. In general
- b. Conditional sales contracts

a. In General

The general rule is that for a garage keeper's or repairman's lien to arise on a motor vehicle the work must have been done, or the supplies or storage furnished, by contract with, or authority of, the owner.

While the existence of a valid common-law lien for the value of labor and material used in the repair of a motor vehicle cannot be denied by the person at whose instance the service was rendered, or on behalf of any interest for which he was then authorized to act,¹ in order to lay the foundation for a common-law lien for repairs, supplies, or storage, it must appear that the work was done, or the supplies or storage furnished, by contract with, or by authority of, the owner,² and the same is true with respect to a statutory lien, at least where the statute requires the work to be done at the request, or with the consent, of the owner,³ except where the statute permits one not the owner, but the legal possessor, to subject the property to a lien.⁴

A mere bailee⁵ or borrower,⁶ or a thief,⁷ or one merely having possession⁸ has no authority to create a lien for repairs, supplies, or storage of a motor vehicle. However, a statute referring to "the person owning the car" has been held to refer not to the legal owner, but to the person having the indicia of title and in the lawful possession of the automobile;⁹ and it has been held that whether the mechanic knew that title was in some person other than the one in possession when repairs were made is immaterial in determining whether a lien was created.¹⁰

Express or implied consent. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the consent or agreement of the owner may be either express or implied.¹¹ Proof of a written memorandum signed by the owner, however, is essential where the statute confers a lien on persons furnishing labor or material, who shall obtain from the owner of the vehicle a written memorandum thereof signed by him.¹² Where the statute provides that the labor or materials must be furnished "for" a person, it is not sufficient that they be furnished with his knowledge or consent.¹³

An owner's ratification of oral contract with another in possession of automobile for repair thereof is sufficient to establish contract, so as to entitle repairman to lien for work done and material furnished in repairing it; and owner's approval, adoption, or confirmation of such oral contract, at time when there is option to reject it, is sufficient to establish contract, and owner's subsequent attempted revocation of such ratification is immaterial to existence of contract.—Williamson v. Winningham, 186 P.2d 644, 199 Okl. 393.

the work to be done at the request or with the consent of the owner, whether the owner is a conditional buyer or a mortgagor remaining in possession or otherwise, a lessee or a sublessee cannot be regarded as included by the words "or otherwise,"¹⁴ and, under a statute requiring repairs or supplies to be furnished at the request or with the consent of the owner or his representative, no lien can be had for repairs furnished the lessee of an automobile in possession under the lease,¹⁵ particularly where the lease provides that no repairs shall be made without the consent of the lessor.¹⁶ In other circumstances repairs for a lessee have been held to create¹⁷ or not to create¹⁸ a lien. Although the statute in the jurisdiction wherein the repairs are made may confer a lien for repairs made at the request of the owner or his representative, whether such owner is a conditional buyer or a mortgagor remaining in possession or otherwise, the law of another state where a motor vehicle has been leased to the person obtaining the repairs will be followed in determining whether the lessee is the owner's representative.¹⁹

Mortgagor; mortgagee. A garageman appointed legal custodian of an automobile has been held not prevented from claiming his statutory lien for repairs thereto by the fact that they were made at the direction of one holding a chattel mortgage on the automobile;²⁰ and, under at least one statute, an agreement by the mortgagor in possession for the care or keeping of a vehicle is sufficient to support a lien in behalf of a garageman.²¹ Likewise, one storing a motor vehicle at the request of the mortgagee in possession has been held to have a lien for storage.²² On the other hand, a purported chattel mortgagee seizing an automobile under an invalid mortgage cannot create a valid lien by requesting repairs,²³ and a garageman to whom a chattel mortgagor delivers a truck for repairs and who thereafter holds it for prior repairs cannot assert a lien for storage as against the chattel mortgagee on the ground that it was stored at the request, and with the consent, of the mortgagor.²⁴

Effect of special agreement as to payment. A special agreement for a particular mode and time of payment may prevent the attaching of a lien.²⁵ Where, after completion of repairs, the owner allows the vehicle to remain with the repairman under an agreement to pay a reasonable storage until such time as he is able to pay for the repairs, no lien for storage arises.²⁶

The authorities differ as to whether the purchaser of a motor vehicle under a conditional sales contract, having possession thereof, has authority to order repairs, so as to give the repairman a lien.

According to some authorities, delivery of a motor vehicle to the purchaser under a conditional sales contract gives the purchaser implied authority to have it repaired if reasonably necessary to its operation, or preservation, so as to create a lien in the garage keeper or repairman;²⁷ but there is authority to the contrary.²⁸ A provision

R.I.—Goldstein v. Mack Motor Truck Co., 183 A. 136, 56 R.I. 1, 104 A.L. R. 261.

As against a conditional seller's assignee, a mechanic furnishing labor and material at the request of the conditional buyer only has no

in a conditional sales contract requiring the vendee to keep the motor vehicle free of encumbrances has been held to negative the existence of implied authority in him to have repairs made,²⁹ and a provision authorizing the vendee to have the car repaired merely indicates the vendor's approval of such repairs and not his obligation to pay the cost thereof;³⁰ but, on the ground that the law, and not the consent of the parties, creates the lien,³¹ similar provisions have been held not to prevent the creation of a lien,³² even though including a provision for the making of repairs at the expense of the buyer.³³

By express provision of statute, a conditional vendee may subject a motor vehicle to the lien of a garage man,³⁴ as he may under a statute permitting a lien for repairs to be made at the request of the legal possessor of the property,³⁵ and the same has been held under a statute permitting a lien where the charges were agreed to by the person owning the car,³⁶ or by an owner or any other person with his authority, express or implied.³⁷ On the other hand, a conditional vendee has been held not an owner within a statute authorizing a lien for repairs made by direction or consent of the owner;³⁸ and a lien statute under which the purchaser of a chattel under an agreement is to be deemed the lawful owner thereof or the authorized agent of the owner does not apply, so as to create a lien, where an automobile is transferred by the conditional buyer without the approval required by the conditional sales contract.³⁹ Under a statute providing that repairs can be made only at the request of the owner in order to give a lien, no lien can be had for repairs made at the request of a conditional vendee in express violation of the sale contract and without authorization or ratification by the seller.⁴⁰

A garage keeper has been held unable to claim a lien on a motor vehicle for storage thereof at the request of the conditional vendee's judgment creditor or of a city marshal acting under a levy.⁴¹ The conditional vendee of a motor vehicle is without implied authority from the vendor to order gasoline therefor from a garage keeper so that the latter may have a statutory lien.⁴²

*The amount of a lien created by a conditional buyer may be limited by statute.*⁴³

§ 747. Possession

- a. Lien as dependent on possession
- b. Right to possession

a. Lien as Dependent on Possession

- (1) In general
- (2) Improper deprivation of possession; bad or stopped check
- (3) Repossession of vehicle

(1) In General

While the authorities are not uniform, the general rule is that, except where statutes provide otherwise, a garage keeper's lien on a motor vehicle is dependent on his possession thereof, and is lost by his surrender of possession.

Possession of a motor vehicle is broadly held essential to the maintenance of a lien for repairs thereof.⁴⁴ More particularly, at common law the lien on the automobile.—Pierce-Arrow Finance Corporation v. Mitten, 284 P. 998, 75 Utah 306.

Order or request

Transfer without approval

Where conditional buyer transferred automobile to another, who in turn transferred it to second transferee, and no approval of either transfer was obtained from conditional seller's assignee, as required by conditional sales contract, second transferee was not "lawful possessor" or "in lawful possession" so as to give lien to party who furnished and installed wheels, tires, and tubes at request of second transferee.—*Goodrich Silvertown Stores v. right of a mechanic or repairman to a lien on a motor vehicle repaired by him is dependent on his retention of possession of the vehicle,⁴⁵ and the same is true under statutes substantially declaratory of the common law or making a lien for repairs or storage dependent on possession.⁴⁶ Under such rule or statutes, the lien is waived or lost by a surrender or loss of possession of the motor vehicle.⁴⁷ Thus, the keeper of a garage, in the absence of a statute or agreement providing otherwise,⁴⁸ has no lien for an amount due for repairs for an automobile kept in such garage, where the Actual or constructive possession

Such possession may be actual or constructive; one furnishing materials and performing labor for repairing of automobile under oral contract with another than owner thereof, who acquiesced in such betterment of his property, was entitled to common-law lien, based on either actual or constructive possession, even though owner reclaimed automobile from subcontractor, rightfully in possession thereof, and refused to return it for completion of repairs.—Williamson v. Winningham, 186 P.2d 644, 199 Okl. 393.

Leaving a motor vehicle in the street in front of the repairman's place of business for the period of time necessary to replace old tires with new ones, during which time the owner is absent, confers on the repairman sufficient possession to support a lien.—Courts v. Clark, 164 P. 714, 84 Or. 179.

Waiver and loss of lien generally see infra § 750.

Removal and mortgage by owner

The statutory provisions giving garage keepers and repairmen a lien for services do not apply where the owner of the automobile is permitted to take it away and mortgage it to an innocent purchaser for value without notice.—Wolman v. Raphael, 278 Ill.App. 172.

Under the general possessory lien statute, the possessory lien for the repair of a chattel is lost if possession is unconditionally resumed by the owner, and, hence, garageman who surrendered possession of automobile several times to the owner after repairing the automobile had no lien under such statute for those repairs.—Bongard v. Nellen, 298 N.W. 569, 210 Minn. 392.

Reliance on insurance coverage

Where lessee took trailers to defendant for repairs, defendant waived any common-law lien for repairs he may have had when he returned the trailers to lessee after making repairs relying on being paid out of insurance coverage and without any reservation, or circumstances showing a reservation, that defendant retained a lien on the trailers if not paid out of insurance coverage.

—Joy Oil Co. v. Fruehauf Trailer Co., 29 N.W.2d 691, 319 Mich. 277.

Dealings with conditional purchaser

(1) Statute providing that voluntary restoration of personal property to its "owner" by holder of lien thereon dependent on possession extinguishes lien, unless parties otherwise agree, and that such agreement is ineffective as to owner's creditors and subsequent bona fide purchasers and encumbrancers, was held inapplicable to lien for storage charges on automobile surrendered daily to conditional purchaser agreeing that lien should not be extinguished by voluntary restoration of car to him.—C. I. T. Corporation v. Biltmore Garage, 36 P.2d 247, 3 Cal.App.2d Supp. 757—Pacific States Finance Corporation v. Freitas, 295 P. 804, 113 Cal.App. 757—Davis v. Young, 242 P. 743, 75 Cal. App. 359.

(2) Under statute providing that mechanic forfeits lien if he consents to removal of vehicle, except as against person at whose request repairs are made, mechanic lost lien as against conditional seller under recorded conditional sales contract which required purchaser to keep truck free of encumbrances, by consenting that truck be removed by purchaser who, on default, gave seller right to repossess the truck, as against contention that under theory of agency conditional seller impliedly clothed purchaser with authority to order repairs; mechanic was charged with notice of recorded conditional sales contract notwithstanding he was without actual knowledge thereof.—Universal Credit Co. v. Printy, 119 P.2d 108, 45 N.M. 549.

(3) Agreement or consent of owner generally see supra § 746.

48. Statutory continuation of lien

(1) Purpose of act giving garagemen lien on articles repaired for a specified number of days from date of completion of repairs was to continue lien for limited period even after delivery of repaired articles to owners.—Hart Enterprise Electrical Co. v. Stewart, La.App., 168 So. 791.

(2) In conditional seller's action to foreclose lien on truck, denying recovery to mechanics for services was error, in view of fact that it did not appear that they voluntarily relinquished possession of truck more than statutory period subsequent to the accrual of their lien for services.—Yellow Mfg. Credit Corporation v.

owner exercises the right to use it at his pleasure,⁴⁹ and by the daily surrender of possession the garage keeper loses his lien for storage charges previously incurred,⁵⁰ and such lien is not revived by the daily return of the automobile to the garage.⁵¹

On the other hand, it has been held that a repairman does not lose his common-law lien by allowing the temporary removal of the car from his shop,⁵² particularly where it is returned and no rights of third or innocent persons intervene,⁵³ and that the mere temporary surrender of the car by the repairman may not under all circumstances be sufficient to terminate the lien.⁵⁴ Likewise, it has been held that in order to acquire a lien for storage, claimant is not necessarily required to have possession of the motor vehicle,⁵⁵ and that the lien exists, even where the owner is permitted to take the car from the garage daily.⁵⁶

By some statutes a lien for repairs is given which is not dependent on possession,⁵⁷ and the delivery of the vehicle to the owner without collecting the charges does not deprive the garage owner of the lien except as against one deriving title or possession through the owner of the vehicle;⁵⁸ or the lienor, after parting with possession, may enforce the lien by obtaining condemnation and sale of the property for the payment of the repair charges.⁵⁹ Under a constitutional provision that artisans and materialmen of every class shall have a lien on articles made or repaired by them for the value of their labor done or material furnished, the lien provided for has been held not dependent on a retention of possession.⁶⁰ A statute which permits the lien of a repairman to be enforced after voluntary surrender to the owner will not, for that reason, be construed to permit its enforcement as against an innocent purchaser without notice,⁶¹ particularly where such a construction might render it unconstitutional.⁶²

Horowitz, 2 N.Y.S.2d 566, 166 Misc 261.

Constructive possession; agreement to return

(1) Constructive possession of the motor vehicle is sufficient to support the lien, as where it is permitted to leave the garage keeper's actual possession under an agreement for its return—Maccar Trucks v. Gorenstein, 248 N.Y.S. 231, 139 Misc. 681.

(2) The lien is not lost by permitting the owner to take the car for temporary use under an agreement to return it.—In re Carter, D.C.N.Y., 21 F.2d 587.

(3) However, mere constructive possession of automobile by garage keeper is insufficient to give lien, dependent on possession of automobile, for repair and storage charges; garage keeper did not have even constructive possession while car was in hands of conditional purchaser, to whom keeper daily surrendered possession thereof, since purchaser's agreement that such lien should not be extinguished by voluntary restoration of car to purchaser did not make keeper owner of car or make the purchaser the keeper's agent to hold it for keeper.—*C. Conformity to general rule as to liens

62. N.M.—Abeytia v. Gibbons Garage, supra.

A statutory lien for materials or supplies has been held to depend on possession of the motor vehicle for which the supplies were furnished;⁶³ at least as against an innocent purchaser of the vehicle for value without notice;⁶⁴ and a provision giving a garage owner a lien for gasoline furnished motor vehicles has been held not to confer a lien where there is no possession of the vehicles.⁶⁵ Under other authority, in order to acquire a lien for materials furnished, under a particular statute, claimant is not necessarily required to have possession of the motor vehicle;⁶⁶ and, under a statute giving a seller a privilege, and a preference over other creditors of the purchaser if the property still remains in the purchaser's possession, a garage keeper's privilege on equipment sold by him and installed in a vehicle is not lost when the buyer loses possession of the vehicle by seizure thereof under an unsecured claim.⁶⁷

(2) Improper Deprivation of Possession; Bad or Stopped Check

A garage keeper does not lose his lien where possession is obtained from him by trick or device or by false representations.

A garage keeper does not lose his lien on a motor vehicle where possession is obtained from him by a trick or device,⁶⁸ or by false and fraudulent representations,⁶⁹ or by surrendering the vehicle on the strength of a check which is subsequently dishonored.⁷⁰ Likewise, an owner who has obtained possession by giving a check for repairs is, after having stopped payment of the check because of the unsatisfactory character of the repairs, estopped from denying the repairman's right to possession;⁷¹ nor is the repairman precluded from asserting his claim in such a case by the fact that the check was given, and the vehicle delivered to the owner, on Sunday, notwithstanding a statute forbids the pursuit of ordinary callings on Sunday;⁷² and the owner is likewise estopped where he gave the check with the intention of stopping payment thereon, or thereafter decided to stop payment without good cause and in bad faith.⁷³

(3) Repossession of Vehicle

Except where a statute provides otherwise, a garage keeper who has surrendered possession cannot, when the vehicle again comes into his possession for repairs, storage, or supplies, assert a lien on it for previous repairs, storage, or supplies.

If, after repairs have been made, the possession of the motor vehicle is surrendered, the repairman, if the vehicle comes into his possession a second time for repairs, cannot, unless authorized by statute, assert a lien on it for the previous repairs;⁷⁴ and the same has been held as to a claimed lien for storage and supplies.⁷⁵ Likewise, a repairman who sells the vehicle without complying with the statute, thereby losing possession, cannot revive his lien for repairs by subsequently securing possession of the vehicle from the person who purchased it from the original vendee.⁷⁶

By specific provision of the statute, a lienor may be allowed to recover property which he has voluntarily allowed to go out of his possession.⁷⁷

Constructive possession, as where the vehicle is permitted to leave the garage keeper's actual possession under an agreement for its return, may be sufficient to support the lien.

b. Right to Possession

Ordinarily, a garage keeper who has a lien on a motor vehicle is entitled to retain possession thereof, until the lien is discharged or destroyed, unless the statute provides otherwise.

A garage keeper who has a lien on a motor vehicle has a corresponding right to possession.⁷⁸ Unless the statute provides otherwise, under a valid lien, claimant is entitled to retain possession of the motor vehicle until the lien is discharged⁷⁹ or destroyed,⁸⁰ as by payment or a valid tender or refusal thereof.⁸¹ A garage keeper's right to retain possession, under a statute, has been held to depend on the priority of his lien.⁸² Under a particular statute, the holder of a lien for repair of a motor vehicle has been held not entitled to possession until the commencement of an action to foreclose the lien.⁸³

Right as against sheriff; replevin

In action to replevy automobile under conditional sales contract, repairman having lien thereon, who was made party defendant and who had brought attachment in ignorance of contract lien, was held entitled to possession as against sheriff having possession at time of replevin, where repairman was real party in interest and was before court having jurisdiction to consider him the real defendant.—Securities Inv. Detention only against person ordering repairs

A statute giving persons who make repairs the right to "detain all motor vehicles in their possession on which work has been done by them" gives a power to detain only as against the person who delivers a motor vehicle and orders the repairs.—Indiana Truck Corporation of Kentucky v. Hurry Up Broadway Co., 1 S.W.2d 990, 222 Ky. 521.

a. In General

A repairman, to have a lien, must generally bestow labor or expense on the specific thing left with him. His lien attaches whether the work is done by him or his agent, or entirely by his employees.

While, as a general rule, to support a lien on a motor vehicle the labor or expense must have been bestowed or performed on the specific thing left in the repairman's possession,⁸⁴ a lien may be had for the construction and placing of an automobile body on a chassis.⁸⁵ A repairman may have a lien whether the work is done by him or by his agent,⁸⁶ and although the work is done entirely by his employees.⁸⁷

b. Repairs

Liens for repairs to motor vehicles are recognized both under the common law and under statutes, both specific and general.

Under the common-law rule recognizing a specific lien on property in the hands of a tradesman or artisan for the price of work done on it, a repairman is regarded as having a lien at common law for the value of labor and materials used in the repair of a motor vehicle;⁸⁸ or he may have an artisan's

Enhancement of value as basis of lien

The common-law lien for repairs is based on the fact that the repairs enhanced the value of the damaged automobile.—West Allis Industrial Loan Co. v. Stark, 222 N.W. 310, 197 Wis. 363, 62 A.L.R. 1483.

statutory or constitutional lien for work or material used in the repair of personal property at the request of the owner or legal possessor,⁸⁹ or under a statute providing for liens for repairs on any vehicle,⁹⁰ or providing for a lien to wheelrights.⁹¹ Any statutory requirements for the lien, such as the conducting of a business of this nature, must, of course, be met.⁹² An equitable lien for the reasonable value of repairs may be decreed in proper circumstances, notwithstanding no lien was created by express contract or by operation of statute.⁹³ Statutes specifically providing for liens for repairs to motor vehicles have been held valid;⁹⁴ such statutes have been held to be declaratory of the common law,⁹⁵ or in some respects declaratory of the common-law right of lien by an artisan,⁹⁶ or in substitution and amplification of the rule at common law.⁹⁷

"Repair" of an automobile, within a statute giving a lien therefor, includes the furnishing of necessary materials and parts, as well as the work done,⁹⁸ and the repairman acquires no vendor's lien for such materials and parts.⁹⁹ A lien for repairs, or for parts furnished therefor, cannot be made to include an old bill allegedly owed by the owner of the automobile,¹ or an unrelated claim against the latter's wife.²

c. Supplies; Replacements

One who furnishes supplies for a motor vehicle is entitled to a lien only if a statute affords it.

In the absence of a statute conferring it, one who furnishes supplies for a motor vehicle is not entitled to a lien,³ as, for example, for gasoline,⁴ oil,⁵ or a nonfreezing mixture.⁶ However, such a lien may be afforded by statute.⁷

Replacing or selling tires, tubes, or wheels. Under a statute allowing wheelwrights a lien for labor done and material furnished,⁸ or a statute providing that any article constructed, manufactured, or repaired for any person and at his instance shall be liable for the price of the labor and material employed in constructing, manufacturing, or repairing it,⁹ a lien cannot be had for replacing tires; and under another statute a dealer selling tires, tubes, and rims and installing them gratis has been held not entitled to a lien on the vehicle for the price of the articles,¹⁰ since they are not material inci-

Creation and duration of lien

(1) Under the constitutional provision, there is no necessity for an agreement between the parties that the lien shall be created; the constitution creates it and it exists from its creation until discharged, waived, or released by the lienholder; there is nothing in the constitutional provision which limits the existence of the lien so as to secure only debts due when the work is completed.—Shirley-Self Motor Co. v. dentially used in the performance of labor.¹¹ On the other hand, a lien has been allowed for replacing tires under a statute conferring a lien on every automobile repairman who has "expended labor, skill and materials at the request of the owner," etc.;¹² and the sale and installation of wheels and tires, requiring calculations by a skilled employee and supervision of the work incident to installation, have been held a combination of services and materials for which the seller is entitled to a statutory lien.¹³

d. Storage

Under most authorities a garage keeper has no lien for storage except where it is given by statute.

Except where such a lien is given by statute,¹⁴ or where a garage keeper is a warehouseman,¹⁵ a repairman or garage keeper, under most authorities, has no lien for storage.¹⁶ However, other authority recognizes a common-law lien therefor,¹⁷ analogous to that of a warehouseman for storage;¹⁸ and, where a vehicle is left with the garage keeper strictly for the purpose of storage, without any agreement either express or implied that the owner shall have the right of continuous use of the vehicle during such period, it seems that the garage keeper may then have a warehouseman's lien thereon for his proper charges.¹⁹

e. Towing; Bringing in Car

A statutory lien for repairs does not cover towing charges; and a repairman has no lien for going after and bringing in a car.

A statute giving a lien for repairs does not confer a lien for towing charges;²⁰ and a statute authorizing a garage man to have a lien for the storage, maintenance, and repair of a motor vehicle does not authorize a lien for a towage charge where the circumstances of the towage were not shown and it was not shown that it was repaired after having been towed to the garage.²¹ A repairman is not entitled to a lien for charges "for going after and bringing in the car."²²

§ 749. Property Subject to Lien

Unless the statute, provides otherwise, the lien extends only to the vehicle on which the work is done and for which materials are furnished.

In the absence of a contrary provision of the statute, a garage keeper's lien extends only to the motor vehicle on which the work is done and for which the materials are furnished.²³ A lien, limited by statute to the detached accessory, fitting, or part on which work is done, does not apply to repair parts after they have been attached to the automobile,²⁴

Landlord not entitled to lien

A statute giving a lien to one engaged in the business of keeping a place for the storage, maintenance, or keeping of a motor vehicle, "and (who) in connection therewith stores, maintains or keeps" such motor vehicle for pay, does not apply to one who, not as bailee of a car, but merely as landlord, rents space to the car owner in which the car owner, and not the landlord, stores or keeps the car.—Albert & Davidson Pipe Corporation v. Gibney Iron & Steel Co., 159 A. 676, 110 N.J.Eq. 285.

and does not extend to the whole automobile;²⁵ but one repairing a part of a vehicle has been held entitled to a lien on the entire vehicle, even though only that part was brought to him for repair.²⁶

Where the repairman makes but one price for all the work on two vehicles, and does not make any detailed price on each, he is entitled to a lien on one vehicle for the amount due for work on both;²⁷ and one repairing several vehicles at the same time, under one contract and for the same reputed owner, has been held entitled to a lien on all of them, and not required to segregate the repairs and material furnished for each, although some are owned by one owner and the others by another.²⁸ Where the repairman claims a lien for a lump sum, the lien is invalid if lienable and nonlienable items of account are mingled together to make up such sum.²⁹

§ 750. Waiver and Loss of Lien

- a. In general
- b. Effect of payment or tender

a. In General

A repairman's lien may be released by express agreement or waived by acts or conduct inconsistent therewith.

A repairman's lien may be released by an express agreement,³⁰ or it may be waived by acts or conduct inconsistent therewith.³¹ So, the repairman's reliance on the credit of one not the owner, but contracting for the repairs, for payment on a month-to-month plan is inconsistent with an intent to rely for security on a lien which would expire by limitation in ninety days,³² and an agreement under which the motor vehicle is retained by the repairman to be used for a specified period in payment of repair charges is a waiver of a claim to hold the car under a lien,³³ but, where there is no express agreement waiving a lien for repairs on an automobile, the taking of the note of the owner's son on its delivery to him does not have that effect.³⁴ Where a statute confers a lien for a limited period after the repairs are made, the repairman has no lien after the expiration of such period.³⁵ The fact that a garageman is the legal custodian and keeper, appointed by a public officer to have possession of an automobile, does not prevent him from claiming a statutory lien for repairs made.³⁶ Where a repairman, after making necessary repairs without notice of an outstanding reserved title, buys the vehicle from the possessor, counting the repairs as part of the purchase price, he does not lose his right or lien for repairs as against the conditional vendor.³⁷

Waiver or loss of the lien by surrender of possession of the motor vehicle is discussed supra § 747.

Assertion of excessive claim. A lien claimant does not lose his lien by a refusal to deliver the property, unless paid a sum which is more than due, where the claim is made in good faith,³⁸ if there is no tender of the amount actually due.³⁹ However, a great disparity between the reasonable value of the services and the alleged value or contract price may afford a reason for disallowing a claim for a lien.⁴⁰ Where plaintiff who repaired an automobile demanded a greater price than that agreed on, withholding possession until he could compel the payment of such price, his possession was held unlawful.⁴¹

Assertion of claim for nonlienable charge. Where a repairman mingles his claim for repairs for which he is entitled to a lien with a claim for which he is not entitled to a lien, and refuses to release the vehicle without payment of both, he destroys his right to retain the property,⁴² and relieves the owner of the necessity of offering to pay the claim for repairs, which is lienable.⁴³ Where a garage owner paid the freight on an automobile sent to him for repairs, and subsequently an amount was paid on account exceeding the freight charges, the payment could be applied on the freight bill, assuming that there was no lien therefor, and the lien enforced for the balance as covering the repairs.⁴⁴

b. Effect of Payment or Tender

A repairman's lien is discharged by the payment or tender of the amount due.

The lien of a repairman is discharged by a tender of the amount due,⁴⁵ although the debt may remain.⁴⁶ A fortiori, the lien of a repairman is discharged by the payment of the amount due.⁴⁷

§ 751. Reinstatement

Repossession of a motor vehicle as affecting the requirement of possession for the existence of a lien is discussed supra § 747 a (3).

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 752. Preservation and Perfection of Lien

A garage keeper's statutory lien cannot be preserved without a strict compliance with the statute creating it.

Where the lien of a repairman or garage keeper is based on statute, it cannot be preserved without a strict compliance with the statute creating it.⁴⁸ So, it may be essential to give notice of detention of the motor vehicle, or that there be some overt act to detain it and enforce the lien.⁴⁹ Registration of a lien or privilege is not essential where it is not required by statute.⁵⁰

Reduction of lien to judgment. A garage lienor has been held not required to reduce his claim to judgment, and have execution issued, and levy made, in order to perfect and establish the standing of his lien.⁵¹

§ 753. — Notice or Claim

Statutory requirements as to the notice or claim of a garage keeper's or repairman's lien must be fulfilled.

Where the statute so provides, a lien for repairs is lost unless a lien claim is filed in a proper office within a specified time;⁵² but it has been held unnecessary, in order to fix a constitutional lien, to comply with the legislative requirements as to giving notice, except as to rights of subsequent lienholders in good faith and without notice.⁵³ A statute requiring the filing of a repairman's lien, in order to permit its enforcement as a chattel mortgage, does not require such filing so as to enable him to retain possession until his claim is paid.⁵⁴ Further, where the statute provides for the filing of a statement within a specified time in order to preserve the lien, the filing of such a statement is not material where the action to enforce the lien is begun within the time for such filing and there is no intervening adverse claim;⁵⁵ and a statutory notice of lien has been held not essential to a garageman's right of lien where the motor vehicle on which the lien is claimed is in his possession.⁵⁶ A notice, provided by the statute conferring a lien, to be given to the owner or conditional vendee in case of enforcement of such lien is not a prerequisite to a re-taking of the property as against one who has taken it from the possession of the garage keeper by judicial process.⁵⁷

Record or filing as notice. The record of an unsatisfied and undischarged repairman's lien, which was filed, and on which foreclosure was commenced, within the time allowed by statute, is notice not only of the lien but also of the action to foreclose it.⁵⁸ Where the assignee of a lien timely files a notice of lien in the proper office, as required by statute, subsequent purchasers of the vehicle purchase with constructive notice of the lien and its assignment.⁵⁹

Contents; description of property. In determining whether the description of the motor vehicle in the lien notice is sufficient, the notice must be construed as a whole;⁶⁰ and the court will bear in mind that such notices ordinarily affect only those who are engaged in, or identified with, the trade or business out of which such liens arise.⁶¹ A lien is not invalidated by the fact that an innocent mistake is made in the lien notice in fixing the dates between which the work was done and the materials furnished.⁶² The lien notice has been held not required to allege that it was filed within the statutory period after delivery of the motor vehicle to the owner or reputed owner.⁶³

The amendment of a filed lien statement may be permitted, in furtherance of justice, where such amendment does not prejudice the rights of others.⁶⁴

§ 754. Priorities

- a. In general
- b. Priority as against conditional seller
- c. Priorities as against other persons or liens

a. In General

A garage keeper's statutory lien has been held not superior to a previously acquired lien in the absence of statutory provision to that effect; but a statute, providing that such lien shall have no effect against certain named claims, ranks it ahead of all preferred claims not so named.

A statutory lien for repairs or supplies furnished for a motor vehicle has been broadly held not superior to a previously acquired lien or title in the absence of statutory provision conferring such superiority;⁶⁵ but a statute giving a repairman a lien and providing that it shall have no effect against certain named classes of claims ranks the lien ahead of all preferred claims other than those named.⁶⁶ By express provision of the statute, the lien of a repairman on a motor vehicle may be made subject to all prior liens.⁶⁷

A garage keeper's right to retain possession of the vehicle as affected by the priority of his lien is discussed supra § 747 b.

b. Priority as against Conditional Seller

Priority of a garage keeper's lien is governed by statute in a number of jurisdictions but generally, in the absence of statute, a lien for repairs, storage, or supplies furnished by a garage keeper at the instance of the conditional buyer of the motor vehicle, without the express or implied consent of the conditional seller, is inferior to the lien or title of the conditional seller.

the garage keeper has no notice of the condition,⁶⁹ at least where the conditional seller derives no benefit from the transaction.⁷⁰ Priority is governed by statute in a number of jurisdictions, and, accordingly, the garage keeper's lien may be made superior⁷¹ or inferior⁷² to the lien or right of the conditional seller by express terms of the statute, or by terms of the statute from which the superiority or inferiority of the garage keeper's lien may be implied.

Statutory provisions respecting superiority as between a garageman's lien and a conditional sales contract must be read in association with other related statutory provisions⁷³ and then be given a plain and rational meaning in the promotion of the object of the legislation.⁷⁴ Priority of the garage keeper's lien has been denied where the statute limits the lien to repairs made at the request of the owner,⁷⁵ unless the term owner includes conditional buyer in the statutory definition;⁷⁶ and priority has been granted where the statute confers a lien on the garage keeper for repairs made at the instance of the owner or possessor of the vehicle,⁷⁷ or made under a contract with the legal or equitable owner.⁷⁸

Where a garage keeper purchases a motor vehicle from the conditional buyer who was required by the terms of the conditional sales contract to keep the vehicle in repair, the garage keeper may not assert a prior lien for subsequent repairs against the conditional seller.⁷⁹

The garage keeper's lien may be superior to that of the conditional seller where the seller has given the buyer express or implied authority to contract for the repairs or services,⁸⁰ but what constitutes implied authority to contract for repairs or services is frequently subject to a divergence of judicial opin-

Default by vendee; recaption of property

ion. In some jurisdictions the conditional seller of the vehicle, by allowing the buyer to have possession of it for use, is regarded as having impliedly consented to a bailment of the vehicle for reasonable repairs or storage charges, and the lien of a repairman for such repairs or storage charges is therefore held superior to the claim of the conditional seller,⁸¹ even though the garage keeper has knowledge of the seller's lien or claim, if the repairs are actually necessary to preserve the property and permit its ordinary operation;⁸² but in other jurisdictions the consent of the seller to the repairs has been held not to be implied from the mere fact of the permission of possession to the buyer.⁸³ The fact that the conditional sales contract requires the buyer to keep the vehicle in repair at his expense has been held not to authorize the buyer to subject the vehicle to a lien for repairs superior to the title of the conditional seller;⁸⁴ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁸⁵ A provision of the conditional sales contract that the buyer will keep the vehicle free of all liens or encumbrances has been held to negative the existence of implied authority to have repairs made on the credit of the vehicle so as to subject it to a lien superior to the title of the conditional seller;⁸⁶

but there is also authority to the contrary.⁸⁷ A covenant by the purchaser in a conditional sales agreement that he would give the seller forty-eight hours' notice before having work done on an automobile has been held to involve no agreement on the part of the seller that his lien should be subordinated to that of the repairman, if repairs were made without such notice.⁸⁸

Where the conditional seller knows that the buyer is having the vehicle repaired and makes no objection, an implication of authorization arises;⁸⁹ but a conditional seller does not authorize the buyer in possession to subject it to a superior lien for repairs by merely becoming aware that he did so, where such implication is contrary to the intent evidenced by the written contract between the parties.⁹⁰

Recording or filing sale contract or lien. Although it has been held that the repairman's lien is inferior to that of the conditional vendor whether or not the conditional sale is recorded,⁹¹ as a general rule, in order for a conditional vendor to have priority over a repairman's lien, the conditional sales contract has been required to be duly recorded⁹² prior to the furnishing of the repairs,⁹³

Filing as required by Uniform Conditional Sales Act

Where statute provided that garage keeper's lien should be prior to conditional sales contract, unless latter was "properly filed," but provided no criteria for determining proper filing, filing as required by Uniform Conditional Sales Act controlled; prior lien of nonresident under foreign conditional sales contract was held preserved as against local garage or the failure to record it excused by the facts.⁹⁴ So, a conditional sales contract which has not been recorded as required by its terms⁹⁵ or by statute⁹⁶ cannot, it has been held, be upheld as a prior claim against a lienor for repairs; likewise, a common-law lien for repairs is superior to the unrecorded lien of a conditional vendor of which the lienor has neither actual nor constructive notice.⁹⁷ In this connection, the recording of a conditional sales contract in one state has been held not to affect a garage keeper in another state with constructive notice,⁹⁸ and his lien for repairs to the motor vehicle has been held superior to rights of the seller under a conditional sales contract made and recorded in another state,⁹⁹ but it has also been held that the lien of the garage keeper is inferior to the right of the seller under a conditional sales contract recorded in a foreign state where the vehicle was removed from the foreign state without the seller's knowledge or consent.¹

Subsequent default. The lien of the repairman against a conditional seller where otherwise recognized exists, even though the buyer thereafter defaults in payments to the seller.²

Storage by sheriff. A statutory lien for storage on an automobile taken by the sheriff from the conditional purchaser under an execution or attachment and stored by the sheriff, has been held superior to the conditional vendor's purchase-money lien.³

What law governs. The question whether a conditional sales contract between nonresidents was properly filed so as to defeat a local garage keeper's statutory lien must be determined by local law.⁴ Likewise, in determining whether a garageman's lien, arising under the law of the forum, is superior to the rights of the holder of a conditional sales contract recorded in another state, the intent of the legislature of the state of the forum controls;⁵ in these circumstances the law of the forum is prima facie the law to be applied,⁶ and, if the conditional seller or his assignee wishes the benefit of the law of another jurisdiction, the burden is on him to prove the foreign law.⁷

Where, under the law of the forum, an earlier lien will take precedence over the repairman's lien, precedence will be awarded to a valid conditional sales agreement made in a foreign state.⁸

c. Priorities as against Other Persons or Liens

Authorities differ as to whether a garage keeper's lien is superior to the title or claim of a bona fide purchaser of the vehicle.

A statutory lien for repairs and storage has been held superior to the title of a subsequent bona fide purchaser acquiring the vehicle without notice or knowledge of the lien and before the filing thereof.⁹ On the other hand, a lien for accessories and labor has been held inferior to the claim of a bona fide purchaser of the motor vehicle, on which the lien existed at the time of the sale,¹⁰ although keeper's lien, where copy of contract was filed in proper district within statutory period.—C. I. T. Corporation v. Jorgensen, 242 N.W. 594, 60 S.D. 7.

Constructive notice; removal of vehicle from county

Under statute, repairman claiming lien was held charged with constructive knowledge of conditional seller's lien where repairs were completed before expiration of one hundred twenty days after automobile left county in which conditional sales contract was filed; lien of owner of conditional sales contract, filed of record, was held prior to lien for repairs furnished on automobile in another county within one hundred twenty days after automobile was removed from county in which contract was filed.—*Commercial Credit Co. v. the sale took place only a few hours before seizure under the lien;¹¹ and a lien for storage and supplies in favor of a garage keeper allowing the owner to remove the automobile from the garage for daily use has been held subordinate to the rights of an innocent purchaser for value without notice of the lien.¹²

Priority as between an attachment lien and a garage keeper's lien is discussed in Attachment § 272 b (1), and priority as between the lien of a mortgage on a motor vehicle and a repairman's lien is considered in Chattel Mortgages § 300, and between such mortgage and a garage keeper's lien for storage, services, and supplies, in Chattel Mortgages § 297.

§ 755. Assignment or Transfer

A lien on an automobile for repairs has been held transferable.

A repairer of an automobile having a lien for charges may transfer the lien and the possession of the automobile,¹³ except that the lien of a garage keeper cannot be assigned where such assignment would necessarily constitute a breach of contract between the parties to the bailment;¹⁴ and it has been held that a lien for storage cannot be transferred or assigned.¹⁵ Where a garage is sold, although the buyer comes into possession of a motor vehicle held by the seller to protect a lien for repair charges, he has no right to the lien on such vehicle, unless it has been assigned to him by the seller.¹⁶

The filing of a notice of lien by the assignee thereof is discussed supra § 753.

§ 756. Action by Lienor to Recover Possession

A repairman wrongfully deprived of possession of a motor vehicle may maintain an action for its return or for the amount of his lien claim.

Where possession of a motor vehicle has been wrongfully procured from the repairman, he may maintain an action for a return of possession or in the alternative for the amount of his lien claim,¹⁷ and by specific provision of statute a lienor may be allowed to recover a vehicle which he has voluntarily allowed to go out of his possession,¹⁸ although before exercising this right, as against a subsequent vendee of the vehicle, he must make demand on the vendee for payment of the debt secured by the lien.¹⁹ Where, however, he retakes a motor vehicle by replevin which had been taken from him at the suit of the owner and for which security had been given, he is not entitled to a lien for storage charges accruing after the retaking.²⁰

Where a garage keeper permitted an automobile owner to use the automobile during the day, and the owner's executors sold it without notice of the garage keeper's claim, the court cannot direct the executors to return the car to the possession of the garage keeper for the purpose of enabling him to satisfy his lien.²¹ Although the statute conferring a lien requires notice to be given to the owner or conditional buyer in case of enforcement of such lien, the notice is not a prerequisite to a retaking of the property as against one who has taken it from the possession of the garage or livery-stable keeper by judicial process.²²

Expenses. A lienholder who repossesses a motor vehicle for his own benefit has been held not entitled to expenses incurred in doing so, where the lien statute does not provide for a lien for such expenses.²³

§ 757. Action by Owner to Recover Possession or for Conversion

General principles governing civil actions have been applied to an action by the owner of a motor vehicle, on which a garage keeper has or claims a lien to recover possession thereof or for conversion.

On the refusal of a garage keeper to surrender the motor vehicle on which he has a lien on tender of the amount due, the owner of the vehicle may sue in replevin or in conversion, pay the amount claimed by the lienor and recover back the excess, or enjoin the sale and determine the proper amount of the lien;²⁴ and, where the seller of a motor vehicle retains title under a conditional sales contract and the buyer is in default under the contract, the seller has a general or special property in the vehicle, is entitled to its possession, and may maintain detinue against one claiming a lien for repairs made for the buyer,²⁵ or, where the lienor refuses to accept a tender and return the vehicle, may maintain an action for conversion.²⁶ Where a repairman refuses to deliver a motor vehicle until charges for which he has no lien and for which the owner is not liable are paid, the owner may maintain an action for conversion of the vehicle;²⁷ likewise, a conversion may be evidenced by the facts that the garage keeper received an automobile with the understanding that he would sell it and pay the owner a portion of the proceeds, applying the²⁸ balance on the repair bill, but that he refused to sell it and pay the owner anything therefor. Before commencing an action of replevin, plaintiff is bound to make a demand and pay or tender the amount of defendant's lien.²⁹

An action by the owner to recover possession of a motor vehicle retained by a garage keeper under a claim of lien for repairs or storage, or for conversion, will be defeated by the establishment of a valid lien,³⁰ where there has been no tender of the amount of the lien claim;³¹ and sequestration will be dissolved where defendant proves that he has a lien on the motor vehicle for an unpaid repair bill.³² While it has been held that a counterclaim for repairs may be set up by the repairman as against replevin by the owner,³³ under a statute entitling the owner to recover possession regardless of the lien of a repairman, the lien cannot be set up by way of counterclaim in replevin.³⁴ In an action for wrongful detention, where defendant has no lien, plaintiff may recover such a sum as will reasonably compensate him for the deterioration, if any, of the vehicle, and the reasonable rental value thereof from the time of seizure until the time of trial, together with possession of the vehicle, or, in lieu thereof, its then reasonable market value;³⁵ in an action for conversion, where defendant has no lien, the value of the vehicle at the time when the repairman refused delivery has been held the proper measure of damages.³⁶

Where the replevisor of a motor vehicle ruled a garage keeper to file a claim for a garage keeper's lien, nonsuiting the replevisor on the ground that the court could not try his title is error,³⁷ as is nonsuiting him without affording either party opportunity to offer proofs, since the lienor had the affirmative.³⁸

In actions by the owner of a motor vehicle to recover possession or for conversion, general rules apply with respect to the issues, proof, and variance,³⁹ presumptions,⁴⁰ admissibility,⁴¹ and weight and sufficiency⁴² of the evidence, instructions,⁴³ questions of law and fact,⁴⁴ and findings.⁴⁵ A money judgment in favor of the owner in replevin must be conditioned on defendant's inability to restore possession to the owner,⁴⁶ and is unauthorized where there is no evidence as to the value of the motor vehicle.⁴⁷ In replevin against a repairman claiming a lien, a judgment for the latter for the "value" of the vehicles, as provided by statute, has been held limited to the amount of his equity therein, consisting of labor and materials furnished in the repair of the vehicles.⁴⁸

§ 758. Actions to Enforce Lien

An action to enforce a garage keeper's lien on a motor vehicle must conform to any special statutory requirements.

Under particular statutes, provision is made for the enforcement of a repairman's lien on a motor vehicle by a suit in equity⁴⁹ or by attachment,⁵⁰ and the whole proceeding is special and statutory.⁵¹ A statute providing the manner in which a common-law lien may be enforced is repealed by a statute creating a lien and prescribing a method for its enforcement.⁵² A lien for storage cannot be foreclosed under a statute relating solely to other liens.⁵³

Where, under the statute conferring a lien, the repairman is not entitled to retain possession until the amount of his lien is paid, the assertion of the lien, by way of cross complaint in replevin by the owner, cannot be regarded as the commencement of an action to enforce the lien.⁵⁴ The giving of a replevy bond does not have the effect of converting a proceeding to foreclose a lien into mesne process.⁵⁵ The rights of a garage keeper asserting his statutory lien in a chattel mortgagee's replevin action are not affected by a prior judgment in his favor for foreclosure of his lien.⁵⁶ The record of an unsatisfied and undischarged repairman's lien, which was filed, and on which foreclosure was commenced, within the time allowed by statute, is notice not only of the lien but also of the action to foreclose it.⁵⁷ In a proceeding to enforce a repairman's lien on a motor vehicle, wherein the conditional seller thereof appeared and claimed it, the interest of both the repairman and the seller should be ascertained;⁵⁸ the conditional seller, retaining title, is not liable, in case of a deficiency, for repairs made at the instance of the conditional buyer or his assignee, since such seller's liability extends no further than the property.⁵⁹

Where a particular court has the right to try an action based on the furnishing of repairs and accessories for a motor vehicle, whether such proceeding is regarded as an action at law or a suit in equity to foreclose a lien, it must be regarded as having jurisdiction of the subject of the action.⁶⁰ A statute giving justices of the peace jurisdiction to enforce statutory liens against motor vehicles has been held not unconstitutional,⁶¹ but a justice of the peace cannot declare a lien for an amount in excess of that over which he has jurisdiction.⁶² Where the statute provides that the lien claim may be foreclosed in any county in which the chattel may be found, foreclosure may be commenced in such a county, although the lien claim is filed in another county and although the foreclosure may, on demand, be transferred to such county for trial.⁶³ Where proceedings to foreclose a lien are instituted in one county, the forwarding of lien notices to the sheriffs of other counties is not an abandonment of the original proceedings, but a continuation thereof.⁶⁴

Time for commencing or completing proceedings. Proceedings to foreclose a garage keeper's lien on a motor vehicle must be commenced within the prescribed statutory period,⁶⁵ but they need not be brought to final adjudication within the period.⁶⁶

Parties. Where repairs are made at the request of the mortgagor who retains use and possession, no express notice to the mortgagee of proceedings to enforce the lien is necessary.⁶⁷ Where a lien and an assignment thereof are properly recorded, and a foreclosure proceeding is properly brought by the assignee against the original owner of the vehicle, one who buys it after commencement of the proceeding is not a necessary party thereto,⁶⁸ and is bound by the decree therein, although not a party.⁶⁹

Pleading. A complaint in a proceeding to foreclose a lien must disclose a substantial compliance with the essential requirements of the statute under which the lien is claimed,⁷⁰ although it may be aided by a notice of the lien which is made a part thereof,⁷¹ and in the absence of allegation and proof of such facts the lien cannot be enforced.⁷² So, complainant in a suit in equity to enforce a lien must state facts bringing him within the terms of the statute conferring the lien on which he relies,⁷³ although, if he fails to do so, but states facts sufficient to support a judgment in an action at law for goods sold and delivered, the proceeding may be retained as an action at law under a statute providing that no cause shall be dismissed for having been brought on the wrong side of the court.⁷⁴

(2) Where several cars have been sold by the same seller to a buyer with knowledge that they are to be used in a livery business and that it will be necessary to make repairs on them from time to time, it is not necessary that claimant of a lien on all the cars should, as against the

Owner's ratification of repair contract

An automobile owner viewing and approving or acquiescing in repair of automobile by permission of another in possession thereof, became indebted to person making repairs and was bound by judgment for amount of such debt and foreclosure of lien on automobile therefor, although his ratification of repair contract was not pleaded and express contract was not established.—Williamson v. ject to a general demurrer where it states facts showing a personal obligation on the part of defendant.⁷⁵ A recital in an affidavit to foreclose a lien that the repairman is in possession of the vehicle or has filed the claim of lien as required by law is not an express allegation that the lien has been recorded,⁷⁶ and a counter-affidavit denying that the repairman has a lien and alleging that the owner of the vehicle is indebted to him for only a part of the sum claimed is sufficient to make an issue.⁷⁷ Statutory requirements for the filing of a counter-affidavit must be complied with.⁷⁸

Evidence. One asserting a statutory lien for repairs must establish the facts essential to such a lien under the statute,⁷⁹ and the general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence apply.⁸⁰

Questions for jury. In a proceeding to enforce the lien the question whether labor and material were furnished for defendant is on conflicting evidence, one of fact for the jury;⁸¹ and, where repairs were to be paid for in cash, the intention of the owner of the vehicle in obtaining it by giving a check, and whether his stopping payment thereon was with or without good cause and was in good or bad faith are, likewise, questions for the jury.⁸²

Judgment or decree. A judgment for a garage keeper should give defendant a choice between returning the chattel or paying the amount of the lien.⁸³ Under some circumstances a personal judgment in favor of a garageman has been held proper,⁸⁴ but, where a general statute as to the foreclosure of liens authorizes a personal judgment for the amount of the debt where a note or other personal obligation for its payment has been given by the lien debtor, there cannot, in a proceeding to enforce a repairman's lien, in the absence of express statutory authorization, be a personal decree against the debtor where such personal obligation does not appear.⁸⁵ Where a counter-affidavit is required in order to convert a lien proceeding into mesne process, a judgment may be entered in the absence of such a counter-affidavit on a replevy bond against defendant and his surety.⁸⁶

Fees and expenses. A statutory provision, that the party for whom judgment is rendered in an action to enforce any lien may recover reasonable attorney's fees, is available for the protection of plaintiff's right in a suit to foreclose a lien for materials furnished and labor performed in repairing a motor vehicle;⁸⁷ such fee must be reasonable in amount.⁸⁸ A finding of the value of an attorney's services is not justified in the absence of any evidence on the subject.⁸⁹ A garage keeper employing a constable to seize a motor vehicle subject to his lien has been held not entitled to add the constable's fees⁹⁰ or the expenses of seizure⁹¹ to the amount due from the owner under the lien.

§ 759. Sale

A sale of a motor vehicle under a garage keeper's lien must be in accordance with statutory requirements, as with respect to notice.

Where a statute conferring a lien for storage does not authorize a sale of the motor vehicle to enforce such lien, the garage keeper has no right to sell it at public auction to satisfy his claim,⁹² but, where he has also a claim for repairs and accessories for which he has a right under the statute conferring a lien to sell the vehicle, he may sell it and subject the proceeds to his lien for storage.⁹³ A common-law lien in the

Implied assent to sale

One who leaves an automobile with a garage keeper for repairs must be deemed to have contracted to allow nature of that of a warehouseman, if existent, confers on the garage man the right merely to retain the property as security for his debt, and does not confer on him the right to sell the property in satisfaction thereof.⁹⁴ A lien sale under inapplicable proceedings designated by statute for the enforcement of other liens constitutes a conversion.⁹⁵

A sale of a motor vehicle by a garage keeper claiming a lien thereon, without complying with statutory provisions, is a nullity,⁹⁶ and constitutes a conversion thereof,⁹⁷ as, for example, where the sale is made without notice to the owner.⁹⁸ However, a statute requiring notice of sale for storage charges to persons who have given notice of an interest in property has been held to apply only to persons giving actual notice to the lienor.⁹⁹ One claiming an interest in the vehicle, who, although notified of the foreclosure proceedings, fails to assert his rights in such proceedings as provided for by the statute conferring the lien, cannot thereafter assert his claim.¹

While the title conveyed by a sale of a motor vehicle to pay for supplies furnished or repairs made may be only that of the person who ordered the supplies or repairs,² the rights of the purchaser of a motor vehicle at a lienor's sale have been held not affected by the reservation of title contained in a conditional sales contract.³ Thus, one repairing a truck without actual notice of an unrecorded conditional sales contract and regularly enforcing his statutory lien and becoming the purchaser at an execution sale has title as against the seller's assignee.⁴

Where the statute conferring a lien provides for a sale by the lienholder if the amount due is not paid within a specified time, a purchaser at a sale made before such time has elapsed acquires no title,⁵ and a purported sale before the repairs are completed, so that the claim is not due, is premature and void.⁶ Although the amount for which a lien is claimed is more than that to which claimant is entitled, the rights of an innocent purchaser from the buyer at the lien sale are not affected.⁷ The failure of purchasers at a lien sale to complete title of record as required by a motor vehicle law him to sell the car, as provided by statute, on nonpayment of charges.—Willis v. La Fayette-Phoenix Garage Co., supra.

Merger of repairman's liens in judgment

A repairman who intervened in an action by other repairmen against the conditional buyer of a truck condemned to be sold to pay for all repairs, and who took an assignment of plaintiff repairmen's lien and of their interest in the judgment and then purchased the truck at the sale thereunder, thereby acquired the title of the buyer, and the two mechanic's liens of such repairman were not merged into the judgment, but remained in effect as against the seller's assignee, which was entitled to dispossess the repairman of the truck only when it paid him what the buyer owed him for repairs.—*General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. does not confer on third persons who have no claim to the property because of the fact that their rights have been cut off by the lien sale the right to deprive the purchasers of their possession.⁸

Where, in replevin by the mortgagee of a motor vehicle against its purchaser at a sale duly made on enforcement of a lien for necessary repairs made at the request of the mortgagor, defendant has been deprived of the possession of the motor vehicle by virtue of the action, he is, on a finding in his favor, entitled to damages for the detention of the vehicle.⁹

E. RENTING VEHICLE BY LIVERYMAN

§ 760. In General

Where a motor vehicle is rented, the relation of bailor and bailee arises. The bailor has the duty of furnishing a vehicle reasonably fit and proper for the purpose intended; if he also furnishes a driver, he must furnish a skillful and careful one.

Where a motor vehicle is rented or hired, the relation of bailor and bailee arises;¹⁰ a contract for such rental or hiring has been held not to establish the relationship of principal and agent¹¹ or master and servant¹² between the owner and the hirer.

Furnishing fit and safe vehicle. Although he is not an insurer¹³ or a guarantor of the absolute integrity of the vehicle,¹⁴ it is the duty of the bailor to furnish a vehicle which is reasonably fit and proper for the use intended,¹⁵ or reasonably safe.¹⁶ He has the affirmative duty to know that the vehicle rented is in fit condition for the contemplated use,¹⁷ and to exercise reasonable diligence,¹⁸ or ordinary care,¹⁹ by making such simple and available tests as the intended use would suggest to sensible and right-minded persons,²⁰ and to exercise ordinary care to avoid putting forth a machine with defects calculated to injure persons who come in contact with it;²¹ and he must exercise that degree of care in the selection of the vehicle furnished which a prudent person would exercise under like circumstances.²² This duty of diligence arises not entirely out of contract, but out of obligations imposed by law²³ and is in agreement with a legislative policy shown by a statute requiring every motor vehicle to be provided with adequate brakes.²⁴

Furnishing competent driver. A private carrier who lets an automobile for hire with a driver has the duty of furnishing a skillful and careful driver,²⁵ and, through such driver, of using due care in carrying the hirer²⁶ and any other passenger who may be rightfully in the vehicle.²⁷

Liability for hirer's baggage. A liveryman letting a car with a driver for hire is liable for the loss of the baggage of the hirer intrusted to the care of the driver, where the presence of such baggage in the automobile was contemplated by the parties under the implied terms of the contract for hire.²⁸

Regulation; requirement of bond or permit. The business of leasing automobiles to be driven by the lessee upon the public streets is a use of the streets by the lessor for gain and not a use by him as a member of the public in the ordinary way.²⁹ A person letting passenger automobiles for hire without drivers has been held not a carrier within a regulatory statute;³⁰ and the terms "leasing" and "lessee," as used in an ordinance regulating the operation of taxicabs, has been held to refer to the leasing of automobiles to be operated as taxicabs within the city by the lessees thereof, and not to the leasing of an automobile to an individual for his own use.³¹ A company engaged in leasing or renting automobiles without drivers has been held not an "auto transportation company" within a statute requiring such a company engaged in "for hire" operations to obtain a permit, post a bond or insurance policy, and pay a mileage tax.³² A statute requiring those renting out cars for compensation to file bonds covering damages from the negligent operation thereof has been held to have no extraterritorial effect.³³ The primary purpose of an ordinance requiring renters of drive-yourself automobiles to obtain licenses, pay an annual tax per automobile employed, submit automobiles for inspection, and deposit cash or file a bond or insurance policy for injury or damages from the fault of drivers, is not to render damages collectable, but to induce renters to refrain from renting automobiles to the irresponsible and negligent;³⁴ but under an ordinance making it unlawful to drive or operate a livery vehicle without having given a bond, the liveryman, or lessor, is not the driver or operator of the vehicle within the meaning of the ordinance.³⁵

§ 762. Injuries to Person of Hirer

A liveryman may be liable to the hirer of a motor vehicle for injury resulting from a defect therein or from the negligence of a driver furnished therewith.

Except where the rental agreement provides against such liability,³⁸ a liveryman renting out a defective motor vehicle is liable to the hirer, who is injured as a result of the defect,³⁹ at least where the liveryman has knowledge of the defect or where his lack of knowledge results from his failure to examine the vehicle with care and skill;⁴⁰ and the hirer may sue either in tort or for breach of the contract.⁴¹

A liveryman supplying a motor vehicle with a driver may be liable to the hirer for injuries sustained by him as a result of the driver's negligence;⁴² and such liability may be predicated on the existence of the relation of master and servant between such owner and the driver, the test being whether the driver is under the control of the owner.⁴³ Where, however, the hirer directs the chauffeur to drive beyond the destination prescribed in the contract, he cannot recover for injuries sustained in the course of such extra driving,⁴⁴ and, if the driver with knowledge of the terms of the contract of hire acquiesces in the breach thereof, he cannot be said to be acting within the scope of his employment so as to impute

his negligence to the owner;⁴⁵ but, where the direction by the hirer to the driver is of a nature contemplated within the terms of the contract, the hirer is not barred from recovery.⁴⁶ A direction to drive by way of a street whose condition is obviously dangerous cannot be implied from a general direction given by the hirer as to the route to be taken.⁴⁷

Where one hires an automobile with a chauffeur, but permits his own employee to drive, he assumes risk of injury from such operation, as far as any liability of the liveryman or the driver is concerned.⁴⁸

§ 763. — Actions

General rules governing civil actions have been applied in actions by hirers of motor vehicles against liverymen for injuries.

General rules governing civil actions apply in actions by hirers of motor vehicles against liverymen for injuries.⁴⁹ In an action by the hirer of an automobile and chauffeur against the liveryman, a statement which avers in general terms that the injury was caused by reason of defects in defendant's automobile, and of the negligence of the chauffeur in carelessly driving against a tree, is sufficiently definite to charge defendant with culpable negligence.⁵⁰ It is for the jury to determine whether the sudden starting of an automobile was due to its being out of repair or to the negligence of the chauffeur in failing to adjust its mechanism, where the evidence did not clearly point to either conclusion.⁵¹

§ 764. Liability of Hirer in General

The hirer of a motor vehicle is not liable for injuries to a third person caused by a defect to which he did not contribute, or by the negligence of a driver who is not his servant.

The hirer of a motor vehicle is not liable to a third person for injuries resulting from its defective condition, where the hirer did not contribute to such defect.⁵² Likewise, the hirer is not liable for such injuries resulting from the negligence of the driver furnished by the liveryman, where such driver is not the hirer's servant,⁵³ or where the hirer did not contribute to such negligence;⁵⁴ but, where a hirer authorizes another to drive for him, because of his own unfit condition, he becomes liable for injuries resulting from the driver's negligence.⁵⁵ An automobile rental agreement shifting to the hirer the entire burden of liability for injury to any person, including liability for a defective condition of the automobile, has been held not illegal on the ground that it protects the liveryman from liability for his own negligence.⁵⁶

Where a rented vehicle is involved in an accident and is attached, and the hirer makes no attempt to regain it, and does not return it, he is liable to the liveryman for its value.⁵⁷ The hirer of an automobile for a specified journey who uses it on another and longer journey is liable for the damages the garage keeper has sustained by reason of such illegal use.⁵⁸

Theft of vehicle. A hirer contracting with the liveryman that failure to lock the steering wheel makes him responsible in case of theft has been held not discharged from his responsibility by the fact that the key is broken off, so that the wheel cannot be locked.⁵⁹

General rules apply in actions to enforce the liability of the hirer of a motor vehicle.⁶⁰ A bill in an action to recover damages caused by a hirer's failure to take out insurance on a rented motor vehicle has been held to allege with sufficient clearness the agreement on which complainant was relying.⁶¹

§ 766. Injuries to Vehicle

An automobile rental agreement may be such as to impose on the hirer liability for any damage to the rented vehicle.

Where the hirer agrees to assume all damage or loss to the rented vehicle whether caused by his negligence or otherwise, the hirer becomes the insurer of the vehicle,⁶² and the test of his liability is not ordinary care, but the degree of responsibility imposed by the contract.⁶³ Under such an agreement, a hirer who abandons the rented car after a collision is liable for the expense of returning it, the cost of repairs, and loss of use, all of such damages reasonably resulting from the breach of the contract.⁶⁴ An automobile rental agreement shifting to the hirer the entire burden of liability for any damage to the automobile, including liability for a defective condition thereof, has been held not illegal on the ground that it protects the liveryman from liability for his own negligence.⁶⁵ A provision of an automobile rental contract covering an indefinite period and providing that the hirer assumed liability for damage to the vehicle binds the hirer, despite the possible failure of the "trip slip" for the particular trip on which the damage took place to bind the hirer.⁶⁶

Where a truck owner rents out a truck with a driver, and the driver, although the owner's employee, becomes the temporary servant of the hirer, the hirer is liable for the destruction of the truck as a result of the driver's negligence.⁶⁷

§ 767. — Actions

General rules governing civil actions have been applied in actions by liverymen against hirers of motor vehicles for damages to the rented vehicles.

General rules apply in actions by liverymen against hirers of motor vehicles for damage to such vehicles.⁶⁸ Where the hirer, by the contract of hiring, assumes liability for all damages to the motor vehicle, whether or not caused by his negligence, the burden is on him to prove any circumstances relieving him of liability.⁶⁹

§ 768. Injuries to Third Person

- a. In general
- b. Renting out defective vehicle
- c. Renting vehicle to incompetent or intoxicated driver
- d. Renting out vehicle with driver

a. In General

Apart from statutes imposing liability, and except as the liveryman may be liable for renting to an incompetent driver, a liveryman is not liable to third persons for the negligence of the hirer while he is driving the rented motor vehicle.

In the absence of a statute or ordinance providing for such liability,⁷⁰ it has been held that a liveryman, as bailor, is not liable to third persons for the tort or negligence of the bailee while he is driving the rented motor vehicle,⁷¹ in the absence of evidence of the bailee's incompetency to drive,⁷² or in the absence of anything to show that the rented automobile was being used in the liveryman's business.⁷³ A liveryman is not liable to a person injured by the negligence of a driver to whom the hirer turned over the car in violation of the rental agreement,⁷⁴ despite a statute making an owner liable for injuries resulting from the operation of his motor vehicle with the express or implied permission of the owner.⁷⁵ A garage keeper who merely permits the housing of a private car in his garage and is not a party to a contract for

Lease not within ordinance

The leasing of automobile by taxicab company to private individual for his own use was not within regulatory provisions of ordinance regulating use of taxicabs, automobiles, and other vehicles carrying passengers and baggage for hire, so as to permit a recovery against lessor and insurance carrier, under liability policy required by such ordinance to be filed, for damages from negligent operation of automobile by lessee.—

hiring it is not liable for injuries resulting from its negligent operation.⁷⁶

An injured guest, in order to recover against the lessor of an automobile, must prove misconduct of the lessee driver satisfying the guest statute and the hiring of the automobile within the statute imposing liability on the lessor.⁷⁷

Municipal ordinances; claim. Failure to comply with a municipal ordinance does not impose liability on the liveryman for injuries from the operation of a rented vehicle, where no direct causal connection exists between the illegal operation of the vehicle and the injury.⁷⁸ Where an ordinance allows a person injured by a hired automobile additional time to file a claim if the accident renders him incapable of preparing such claim, absolute helplessness is not required, in order that the additional time may be available, but only a condition rendering him unable to perform all the substantial and material acts necessary to the prosecution of the case.⁷⁹

b. Renting Out Defective Vehicle

One renting out a defective vehicle either with knowledge of the defect or, because of lack of care or skill in examining the vehicle, without such knowledge, is liable to third persons for injuries resulting from his negligence in renting such a vehicle.

The owner of an automobile rented to another may, in a proper case, be held in damages for injuries proximately resulting to third persons from his negligence in renting out a defective vehicle,⁸⁰ either with knowledge of the defect or where the absence of such knowledge results from a failure to examine the vehicle for defects with care and skill,⁸¹ or to exercise ordinary care and caution,⁸² unless he can show that the defect was not preventable by any care or skill on his part.⁸³ A liveryman renting a dangerously defective automobile is not exempted from liability to one injured in a collision therewith by the fact that the driver continued to operate it after having knowledge of the defects.⁸⁴ The contributory negligence of a person struck by a rented automobile is no defense to the liveryman if the driver's attempt to stop in time failed because of the liveryman's negligence as to brakes.⁸⁵

c. Renting Vehicle to Incompetent or Intoxicated Driver

A liveryman renting a motor vehicle to one whom he knows, or, in the exercise of due care, should know, to be an incompetent or intoxicated driver, is liable for resulting injuries to third persons.

While a garage keeper has been held not chargeable with knowledge of the hirer's incompetency,⁸⁶ and is not the insurer of the competency of the driver to whom the car is hired,⁸⁷ he is liable to an injured third person if he knows, or should know, that the person hiring the motor vehicle is incompetent to drive it;⁸⁸ he must make a reasonable investigation to determine whether or not the renter is an ordinarily competent operator.⁸⁹

A liveryman renting a motor vehicle to a drunken driver or a driver approaching that condition is negligent and responsible in damages to one injured as a result of the driver's negligence.⁹⁰ The gist of a bailor's negligence in renting an automobile to a drunken driver whose negligence causes injury consists in putting a dangerous instrumentality in the hands of a drunken and irresponsible person for a palpably dangerous purpose,⁹¹ and actual or constructive knowledge of the driver's intoxication is an ingredient of the bailor's negligence.⁹² If the driver was actually intoxicated at the time of hiring, and his condition was apparent to a person of ordinary prudence, garage employees will be held to have had knowledge thereof,⁹³ even though assured by the driver that he had not been drinking.⁹⁴ Where an automobile

liveryman knowingly rents an automobile to a drunken driver and a pedestrian is killed because of the driver's negligent operation of the automobile, the negligent operation and the negligent renting are direct and proximate causes of the death.⁹⁵

A liveryman letting a car with a driver for hire is liable to persons other than the hirer for injuries resulting from the driver's negligence if the relation of master and servant exists between the liveryman and the driver, and if the driver, as such servant, is acting within the scope of his employment.

Where a liveryman lets a motor vehicle with a driver for hire, his liability for injuries to a person other than the hirer is predicated on the existence of the relation of master and servant between the liveryman and the driver,⁹⁶ the test being whether the latter is under the control of the former,⁹⁷ and whether in the particular instance the driver was acting within the scope of his employment.⁹⁸ So, the liveryman is liable for injuries to third persons caused by the driver's negligence while under the liveryman's control,⁹⁹ but not while

Temporary permit instead of driver's license

A liveryman's knowledge that one renting an automobile has no driver's license, but only a temporary permit allowing him to drive if accompanied by a licensed driver, is sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the renter's competency to drive.—Owens v. Carmichael U-Drive Autos, 2 P.2d 580, 116 Cal.App. 348.

89. La.—Anderson v. Driverless Cars, 124 So. 312, 11 La App. 515.

Requirement of driver's license

(1) The mere failure of the renter to require the production of a driver's license by the hirer does not render the renter liable for injuries to a third person, if he makes a reasonable investigation as to the hirer's competency.—Anderson v. Driverless Cars, supra.

(2) However, a corporation's rental of its automobile without inquiring as to the hirer's driver's license, as required by statute, has been held persuasive of carelessness or at least indifference to salutary municipal regulations in the public safety and affecting its business.—Baader v. Driverless Cars, 120 So. 515, 10 La. App. 310.

(3) The statute providing that no person shall rent an automobile to any other person unless the latter is duly licensed as an operator or chauffeur does not give a civil cause of action for damages in favor of third persons against one who has violated such statute, a renting agency was not liable for injury sustained in the rented automobile on the ground that its act in renting the automobile to the driver who had no driver's license was the proximate cause of injuries, where the undisputed evidence showed that the driver was above the average in competency.—Hertz Drive-It-Yourself System of Colorado v. Operation with owner's permission

Where owner leased automobile and furnished driver whom owner unconditionally directed to follow instructions of lessee, driver was "legally operating automobile with owner's permission," within statute imposing liability on owner so permitting; but third person to whom hirer in turn surrendered complete control may also be liable.—Irwin v. Instructing driver where to park does not constitute exercise of control by hirer.—Independence Indem-

The liveryman's liability is incurred in respect of a third person riding in the vehicle by reason of the implied consent of the owner that such person shall become a passenger in the vehicle,² or from the fact that such passenger was invited with the knowledge and assent of the driver acting in behalf of the owner.³ An undertaker supplying an automobile with a driver has been held not negligent in failing to assist a mourner to alight therefrom,⁴ or to warn the mourner of the danger of injury to her hand from the closing of the door by others.⁵

§ 769. — Actions

General rules governing civil actions have been applied in actions against liverymen for injuries, to persons other than the hirers, resulting from the operation of rented motor vehicles.

In an action against a liveryman by one injured as a result of the operation of a rented car, the fact that the driver declined to give his name is immaterial.⁶ While general rules of pleading have been applied,⁷ only the most general allegations of negligence, little short of mere conclusions, have been required in order to state a cause of action against one letting a motor vehicle for hire for injuries to one struck while it was being operated by the hirer.⁸ The rules applicable in civil actions generally have been applied with respect to the evidence,⁹ including its admissibility¹⁰ and the weight and sufficiency thereof.¹¹ Where the evidence is such as to make an issue for the jury,¹² questions of fact ordinarily are for the jury,¹³ un-

F. FILLING STATIONS

§ 770. In General

The business of conducting a gasoline filling and service station is subject to regulation by the state under its police powers even though the business of selling gasoline is not affected with the public interest.

While the conduct of a gasoline filling and service station is a lawful business, as discussed infra § 771, the state may, under its police power, regulate such business.¹⁶ However, the selling of gasoline is not a business affected with a public interest, in the legal sense,¹⁷ and a statute purporting to regulate such business cannot be supported as an exercise of the police power unless some reasonable connection with health, safety, morals, or the general welfare can be made to appear.¹⁸ In construing statutes enacted in pursuance of such power, general rules and principles of statutory

Statutes regulating price signs

(1) A statute prohibiting a gasoline station owner from displaying signs showing the sale price of gasoline at any place other than on the face of the pumps has been held not to be a reasonable exercise of the police power.

Conn.—State v. Miller, supra. N.J.—Regal Oil Co. v. State, 10 A.2d 495, 123 N.J.Law 456.

N.Y.—People ex rel. Jones v. Mestichelli, Magistrates' Court, 18 N.Y.S.2d 406.

(2) It has been held that such statute could not be sustained on the theory that it prevented ruinous price wars between dealers and prevented fraud, since there was nothing which would make dealers in the sale of motor fuels any more immune from tense competition than other merchants, nor could it be sustained as preventing fraud and misrepresentation in industry.—Regal Oil Co. v. State, supra.

(3) However, it has also been held that such statute was not so lacking in support on any rational basis of fact that might reasonably be conceived to sustain it that it might be declared invalid.—Merit Oil Co. v. Director of Division of Necessaries of Life, 65 N.E.2d 529, 319 Mass. 301.—Slome v. Godley, 23 N.E.2d 133, 304 Mass. 187.

(4) A similar statute making all price placards subject to the approval of a state official and prohibiting the posting of placards not approved by such official, and containing a further provision prohibiting the changing of the price placard until it has been posted for a period of twenty-four hours except to meet a posted competitive price in that community, has been held valid.—State v. Woitha, 287 N.W. 99, 227 Iowa 1, 123 A.L.R. 884.

(5) However, a provision prohibiting the changing of a price placard for a period of twenty-four hours after posting, without exception, has been held to be invalid as an arbitrary interference with business.—Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. McBride, 30 N.E.2d 269, 307 Mass. 408, 131 A.L.R. 1254.

(6) Validity of municipal ordinances regulating price signs see infra § 775.

Rebates and discounts

(1) A statutory provision that no premiums, rebates, allowances, concessions, prizes or other benefits should be given directly or indirectly by any retail dealer so as to permit any purchaser to obtain motor fuel from such retail dealer at a net price lower than posted price applicable at time of sale has been held invalid as an arbitrary interference with business and an irrational and unnecessary restriction.—Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. McBride, supra.

(2) However, a statute regulating the posting of price placard and containing a provision that if any rebate, discount, commission, or other concession is granted by distributors or persons engaged in the sale of motor fuel as will reduce the cost or price to any purchaser, the conditions, quantity, and amount of such rebate, discount, commission, or other concession must be posted as part of the posted price, has been upheld as a whole without special reference to such provision.—State v. Woitha, 287 N.W. 99, 227 Iowa 1, 123 A.L.R. 884.

construction are applicable.¹⁹ The fact that the particular phase of the business regulated is subject to other provisions of the law does not affect the operation of the statute.²⁰

Contract between state agency and owner. A filling station owner may, by a valid contract entered into with a state agency, bind himself to perform certain acts with respect to the filling station.²¹

Definitions. A "public service gasoline filling station" has been defined as a place at which gasoline, and usually oils, are stored and supplied, for a price, to the public in general,²² notwithstanding tires and other accessories are not there sold or repairs to motor vehicles made,²³ and a "service station" has been said to mean in modern parlance a building from which gasoline and auto supplies are sold.²⁴ The term "motor vehicle service station" has been held to include a filling station, the business of which is confined to the selling of gasoline, oil, and motor vehicle accessories,²⁵ and not to be limited to a garage or station where repairs on motor vehicles are made.²⁶ A filling station includes not only the house or building provided for storage of supplies for use and shelter of its operatives, but also includes the tanks, pumps, and other structures used in connection therewith, and the approaches and exits.²⁷ In ordinary speech a filling station is not referred to as a store or mercantile establishment where goods, wares, or merchandise are sold or offered for sale at retail.²⁸

§ 771. As Lawful Business

The conduct of a gasoline filling and service station is a lawful business, and such station is not a nuisance per se, in either a business or a residential district, although it must be erected and conducted with due regard for the rights of others.

The conduct of a gasoline filling and service station is a lawful business,²⁹ and such station is not a nuisance per se,³⁰ in either a business or a resi-

19. Fraudulent sales

(1) In determining the purpose of a statute the title thereof may be considered, and the purpose of a statute entitled an act to prevent fraud or misrepresentation in the sale of gasoline and providing that no person shall sell or advertise for sale any gasoline through any dispensing apparatus unless there is displayed on such dispensing apparatus a sign showing the actual total price per gallon has been declared to be for the prevention of fraudulent sales of petroleum products and the protection of purchasers, and such statute has been held not to manifest a legislative intent to make the act of selling a genuine or advertised brand or grade of gasoline for less than the price posted on dispensing apparatus a crime, since the act is not a price-fixing statute, nor does it interfere with the right of a gasoline dealer to charge a different price for each successive sale of gasoline, or a price based on quantity of gasoline purchased.—Ex parte La Belle, 98 P.2d 778, 37 Cal.App.2d 32.

(2) So a similar statute regulating use by retail dealers in motor fuel of signs relating to price of such fuel has been construed as neither a price-fixing law nor a fair trade law, but rather as one designed to prevent fraud on purchasers in retail sale of gasoline as ordinarily carried on in filling stations.—Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. McBride, 30 N.E.2d 269, 307 Mass. 408, 131 A.L.R. 1254.

20. Operation of statute regulating signs designating the price of motor fuel was not prevented by fact that maintenance of dealer's advertising signs was subject to other provisions of law.—Slome v. Godley, 23 N.E.2d 133, 304 Mass. 187.

21. Owner not entitled to question agency's authority

Filling station owner could not question authority of state agency to make contract requiring removal of pumps and related equipment of station from position near highway where he agreed to do so and accepted and retained consideration therefor.—*State Highway Commission of Kansas v. In Pennsylvania

(1) A public gasoline filling station is not a nuisance per se if conducted in a commercial neighborhood.—Bortz v. Troth, 59 A.2d 93, 359 Pa. 326—*Franklin St. M. E. Church of Johnstown v. (2) Such a filling station, however, from the mere fact of operation, becomes a nuisance if conducted in a residential neighborhood.—Bortz v. Troth, supra—Pennell v. Kennedy, 12 A.2d 54, 338 Pa. 285—Thomas v. Dougherty, 190 A. 886, 325 Pa. 525—Calvary Presbyterian Church of Highland Park v. Jones, 185 A. 267, 322 Pa. 77—*Franklin St. M. E. however, with due regard for the rights of others,³² although in the absence of restrictive covenants or statutes or ordinances it would seem that no objection can be made by any person or by a municipality to its erection or maintenance, as long as it is conducted in a proper and safe manner.³³ It has also been held that the storage of gasoline in reasonable quantities at a filling station is not such an unnatural gathering of a dangerous agency as to render the owner prima facie answerable for all damages which are the natural consequence of its escape, regardless of his negligence.³⁴

§ 772. As Nuisance

A filling station may be so erected, conducted, or operated as to be in fact or per accidens a public or private nuisance; whether or not it is a nuisance depends on the facts and circumstances of the case.

A filling station, although not a nuisance per se, as discussed supra § 771, may be so erected, conducted, or operated as to be, in fact or per accidens, a public or private nuisance.³⁵ Whether it is a nuisance per accidens depends on the facts and circumstances of the case,³⁶ including location and

(4) A neighborhood almost exclusively residential is not deprived of that character merely because there are a few community stores or other like buildings therein—Calvary Presbyterian Church of Highland Park v. Jones, 185 A. 267, 322 Pa. 77—Burke v. Hollinger, 146 A. 115, 296 Pa. 510—Atherholt v. De Muth, 14 Pa.Dist. & Co. 573—Ellenberger v. Mikels, supra.

(5) Conversely, a neighborhood almost exclusively commercial is not deprived of that character merely because there are a few residences or other noncommercial buildings therein—Franklin St. M. E. Church of Johnstown v. Crystal Oil & Gas Co., 163 A. 910, 309 Pa. 357.

(6) In small cities and boroughs the courts should take cognizance of the fact that business and residence closely interlock, and, in determining the residential character of a locality, should be especially careful to preserve home dwellers from unnecessary intrusion of business.—Richard v. Weiser, 198 A. 29, 329 Pa. 203—Burke v. Hollinger, supra.

(7) In determining whether the neighborhood is residential or commercial, a zoning ordinance is not, by itself, conclusive.—White v. Old York Road Country Club, 178 A. 3, 318 Pa. 346, remanded for rehearing 179 A. 434, 318 Pa. 569—Appeal of Goodman, 156 A. 309, 305 Pa. 55—Appeal of Perrin, 156 A. 305, 305 Pa. 42, 79 A.L.R. 912.

(8) However, a zoning ordinance

placing the property in question in a commercial or business district and permitting the erection of a gasoline station thereon should be considered by the courts as an aid in determining the substantive question.—White v. Old York Road Country Club, 185 A. 316, 322 Pa. 147—Walker v. Delaware County Trust Co., 171 A. 458, 314 Pa. 257—Appeal of Perrin, supra.

(9) Such zoning ordinance together with the fact that property on which a proposed filling station is to be erected was already devoted to a commercial use of only slightly different character may require the conclusion that the proposed filling station is not an abatable nuisance, even though the property is in a neighborhood where the greater per cent of property is devoted to residential uses—Walker v. Delaware County Trust Co., supra.

Other stations in immediate locality

A filling station may not be said to be a nuisance when there are other such stations within a short distance of it and numerous others in the immediate locality.—Coley v. Campbell, 215 N.Y.S. 679, 126 Misc. 869.

At prohibited location

Gasoline station, when erected and maintained at place prohibited by reasonable regulatory ordinance, may be considered nuisance.—Lombardo v. City of Dallas, 73 S.W.2d 475, 124 Tex. 1—Scott v. Champion Bldg. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 28 S.W.2d 178.

Station held not nuisance, in view of the character of the vicinity.—Fletcher v. Barnard, 133 So. 29, 222 Ala. 380.

Residential or commercial district

(1) "What might be regarded as a nuisance in a purely residential district might be looked upon as a necessary and useful convenience in a district given over to commercial pursuits and places for public gatherings."—Hazlett v. Marland Refining Co. of Ponca City, C.C.A.Kan., 30 F.2d 808, 810.

(2) Erection of modern gasoline station in residential district was a nuisance.—Cities Service Oil Co. v. Roberts, C.C.A.Okl., 62 F.2d 579.

(3) On the other hand, it has been held that where property is zoned for commercial use, including operation of filling station, and permit is duly issued for construction of station, erection thereof may not be enjoined as nuisance, in absence of showing that filling station was being either improperly erected or that it would be negligently or improperly conducted, and fact that property owners improved part of area for residence purposes and desired that such area should so remain, erroneously assuming that district was restricted for residence purposes, did not entitle them to injunctive relief.—Weaver v. inately business or commercial district,⁴⁸ or one that is not exclusively residential,⁴⁹ or where the business is licensed by the proper authorities.⁵⁰ However, it has been held that the operation of a filling station in a strictly residential section,⁵¹ or near to a church,⁵² where unusual noise created by the starting and stopping of motor vehicles causes disturbance and annoyance, and where there is no public necessity for such a station, is a nuisance, as is a station so arranged as to cause the headlights of motor vehicles using it to shine into and upon the dwelling of another person.⁵³ The use of a motor vehicle emitting sparks and flames in a building in which are stored gasoline and oil, the floor of which is saturated therewith, and near tanks containing large quantities of gasoline, has been held to be a nuisance,⁵⁴ but the storage of a large quantity of gasoline at a filling station is not a nuisance where it is properly protected against danger of ignition and it is reasonably isolated from places frequented by human beings.⁵⁵

Power of state or municipality to declare nuisance. It is within the power of the state,⁵⁶ and of municipalities under appropriate grants of power,⁵⁷ to declare that, under particular circumstances and in particular localities, it shall be a nuisance in law and in fact to operate a filling station, provided such power is not exercised arbitrarily or with unjust discrimination.

§ 773. — Relief

- a. Persons entitled to relief
- b. Remedies

a. Persons Entitled to Relief

The state or a subdivision thereof may, through its duly authorized agent or official, proceed in equity on behalf of the public to abate or enjoin the construction or operation of a gasoline filling station as a public nuisance, and a private individual who suffers damage separate and apart from that suffered by the general public has the right to sue for the abatement of a filling station as a private nuisance.

The state or a subdivision thereof may, through its duly authorized agent or official, proceed in equity in behalf of the public to abate or enjoin the construction or operation of a gasoline filling station as a public nuisance,⁵⁸ but not as a private nuisance.⁵⁹ A private individual, on the other hand, may not as a member of the general public, and without showing special facts which are not equally applicable to other property owners of the district or the public generally, secure equitable relief against the owner or operator of a gasoline filling station.⁶⁰ One who suffers damage separate and apart from that suffered by the general public

Right of municipality

Under statute providing that an action may be commenced to enjoin a public nuisance in the name of the state by the attorney general upon his own information or on the relation of a private individual who first obtains leave therefor from the court, it has been held that a municipality is not a private individual, and a municipality failing to bring action in the name of the state or first procuring leave of court to bring action, could not maintain an action under such statute to enjoin the erection of a gasoline filling station, nor could the municipality maintain such action under a statute providing that any person may maintain an action to abate a private nuisance or a public nuisance from which he suffers injury peculiar to himself where the municipality was without property which could be affected by the erection of the filling station.—City of Algoma v. Peterson, 288 N.W. 809, 233 Wis. 82.

has the right to sue for the abatement of the nuisance,⁶¹ as where a filling station is so constructed and arranged that the headlights of motor vehicles making use of it shine into and upon his dwelling house;⁶² and it has been held that the owner of property abutting upon a highway has a sufficient special interest to entitle him to maintain an action to enjoin a municipality from leasing a portion of the highway directly in front of his property for the purpose of the erection and maintenance of a filling station.⁶³

In a proper case the construction or operation of a gasoline filling station constituting a nuisance may be enjoined or the objectionable features abated by a suit brought therefor, and the general rules and principles of equity, especially as they are applied to injunctive relief, are applicable in such suits.

In a proper case the construction or operation of a gasoline filling station constituting a nuisance may be enjoined or the objectionable features abated by a suit brought therefor.⁶⁴ Although it has been declared that restrictions on the location of such stations should ordinarily be by zoning regulations, and not by injunctive decree,⁶⁵ the courts have jurisdiction to entertain such suits.⁶⁶

The general rules and principles of equity, especially as they are applied to injunctive relief, are applicable in such suits.⁶⁷ Thus, while a threatened injury affords a sufficient basis for maintaining a suit and complainant need not wait until the filling station is actually in operation,⁶⁸ in order to warrant enjoining an anticipated nuisance, the threatened injury must be certain and not merely possible or probable.⁶⁹ The right to maintain a bill to enjoin the erection or operation of a filling station as a nuisance may be lost by pursuing a statutory remedy⁷⁰ or by laches.⁷¹ The complaint must show all matters requisite to complainant's right to the relief asked,⁷² and all proper matters of defense may be urged in answer thereto.⁷³ The issues properly determinable by the court are those presented by the pleadings,⁷⁴ and the burden of proof rests on plaintiff to establish his essential allegations.⁷⁵ There is no presumption that the station

§ 774. Use of Street or Highway

A filling station or gasoline pump may not be constructed in such manner as to constitute a permanent material encroachment on the street or highway, and generally a municipality has the right and power to regulate or prohibit the use of streets, parkways, or parking for gasoline filling stations or equipment, and has no power, in the absence of statute, to grant authority for the permanent operation and maintenance of a filling station in the street.

A filling station or gasoline pump may not be constructed or located in such manner as to constitute a permanent material encroachment on the street or highway,⁸⁵ and if it does so it is a purpresture,⁸⁶ and may constitute a public nuisance,⁸⁷ even though it is not in the portion of the street or highway used for the passage of vehicles.⁸⁸ It has been held, however, that the occupation of a

Violation of constitutional provision as to use of streets

Operation of private business in city street, without consent of city, by placing gasoline pumps and air appliances in parkway between sidewalk and curb, and using them in servicing automobiles parked on street parallel to curb, has been held to constitute a public nuisance as violative of constitutional provision prohibiting use of streets for operation of private enterprise without consent of municipal authorities.—McCraney v. City of Leeds, 194 So. 151, 239 Ala. 143.

Apron approaches declared nuisances by ordinance

Apron approaches to a filling station, retaining the curbstone and passing traffic over it, have been held to constitute nuisances as unreasonable obstructions to public travel and an ordinance ordering their abatement is in the interest of public health, safety and welfare and valid, notwithstanding it is in the form of a resolution.—McGowan v. City of Burns, 137 P.2d 994, 172 Or. 63.

The fact that pumps are installed under revocable permit does not bring them within the rule permitting merely temporary obstructions and encroachments on the street.—People v. Wolper, 183 N.E. 451, 350 Ill. 461.

Convenience resulting to owners of motor vehicles from curb gasoline pumps does not bring operation of such pumps within bounds of public parkway between the sidewalk and the traveled street by a filling station is not illegal, in the absence of proper action on the part of the municipality prohibiting such use.⁸⁹

A municipality has the right and power to regulate or prohibit the use of streets, parkways, or parking for gasoline filling stations or equipment,⁹⁰ and such power exists under statutes giving it general police power and control over structures and projections on and over streets.⁹¹ Further, under its general police power a municipality has the power to compel the abatement and removal of such structures already existing when the city's welfare demands it;⁹² and unless such power is exercised in an arbitrary, discriminatory, or unreasonable manner,⁹³ or invades constitutional rights of property,⁹⁴ it will not be interfered with by the courts.

Power to permit and exercise thereof. A municipality has no power, in the absence of statute, to grant authority for the permanent operation and maintenance of a filling station materially encroaching on or in the street,⁹⁵ and such permission, if granted, confers no vested or irrevocable rights on the grantee.⁹⁶ However, under the rule that the legislature may authorize an encroachment on the public highway as long as the public use is not unreasonably interfered with, statutory authority to a municipality to permit the storage of gasoline or oil within the bounds of the highway beneath the surface and to allow on the curb arrangements for drawing therefrom is not invalid,⁹⁷ and a license permitting the erection of a curb pump is a proper exercise of such authority.⁹⁸ The grant or refusal of a permit to install curb pumps is discretionary.⁹⁹ A municipality in granting or refusing such permit must deal fairly with its citizens, and ordinarily cannot make distinctions between different classes of its citizens,¹ but not every classification is invalid,² and a classification based on time and existing conditions has been upheld.³ Notwithstanding the issuance of such permit, a municipality, possessing the requisite power, may cause a curb pump to be removed when in the judgment of the proper officials it obstructs the public highway or causes it to be unsafe to public travel.⁴

Remedies. Under some statutes it has been held that the state attorney general is entitled to maintain an action to enjoin the construction of a filling station upon a portion of the state highway within a city or town notwithstanding the statutory duty of local maintenance.⁵ Where a filling station invades the public right in municipal streets,

§ 775. Municipal Regulations and Restrictions

The power of cities and towns to regulate and restrict gasoline filling stations must rest on valid statutory or charter provisions and must be exercised reasonably and without discrimination, although the burden of showing the invalidity of a regulatory ordinance is on the person who attacks it.

While the power of cities and towns to regulate and restrict gasoline filling stations by ordinance has in some cases gone unquestioned,⁸ such power must undoubtedly rest on valid statutory or charter provisions.⁹ The power to regulate and restrict gasoline filling stations by ordinance has been held to exist under various statutory provisions.¹⁰ The power has frequently been held to be included within the powers conferred by the general welfare provisions of statutes and charters,¹¹ and thereunder cities and towns have the power to define where¹² and how¹³ filling stations may be constructed and operated, and to regulate the use of driveways across sidewalks to such stations;¹⁴ and a vested right cannot be asserted against the proper exercise of such police power.¹⁵

Price signs

(1) A local law providing that it shall be unlawful to sell gasoline unless the seller posts a sign of certain dimensions on each dispensing device stating the selling price per gallon, the name, grade, or quality of gasoline, and the amount of taxes, and prohibiting the posting of any other price signs, has been held to be a reasonable exercise of the police power.—People v. Arlen Service Stations, 31 N.E.2d 184, 284 N.Y. 340, followed in People v. Bluestein, 31 N.E.2d 924, 284 N.Y. 800.

(3) Such ordinance has been held to be not only intended to avoid traffic hazards in area where pedestrians converge on place of assemblage, but also risk of fire, and, where ordinance mentions church, it is intended to avoid noises and interruptions that would interfere with worship and comfort and quiet of worshippers.—Vine v. Board of Adjustment of Village of Ridgewood, 56 A.2d 122, 136 N.J.Law 416.

(4) Fact that such ordinance prescribes distance from curtilage rather than from edifice, has been held not to be unreasonable and void in toto, although such ordinance may operate unreasonably in some circumstances.—Vine v. Board of Adjustment of Village of Ridgewood, supra.

(5) On the other hand, an ordinance prohibiting erection of drive-in gasoline filling station within a specified distance of school grounds has been held to be unreasonable.—*Continental Oil Co. v. Discrimination in favor of existing stations

(1) Ordinance prohibiting erection of more filling stations in district has been held void as discriminatory and giving monopoly to existing stations.—Town of Clinton v. Standard Oil Co., 137 S.E. 183, 193 N.C. 432, 55 A.L.R. 252.

(2) On like principle, ordinance prohibiting erection of gasoline service stations within a specified distance of certain buildings, being in-

provision, must have some substantial tendency to promote and protect the public health, safety, or general welfare.¹⁹ In determining the validity of an ordinance, the judiciary will not inquire into the motives or reasons of the legislature or the members thereof.²⁰ Lapse of time, however long, will not validate an invalid ordinance.²¹

The burden of showing the invalidity of the ordinance is on the attacker,²² and in the absence of a contrary showing the action of the municipal legislative body in enacting the ordinance is presumed to be well founded,²³ and will not be disturbed if it has any reasonable basis in the facts.²⁴ Neither individual citizens directly affected by the violation of an ordinance nor public officials acting as individuals can by their conduct prejudice or destroy the rights of the public to require enforcement of valid ordinances.²⁵

Construction and operation of ordinances. Generally speaking, the scope of an ordinance regulating gasoline filling stations and restricting the use of property for such purposes should not be extended, but should be restricted, by construction and interpretation.²⁶ A regulation prohibiting a filling or service station within a specified distance of certain buildings or of the entrances thereto, has been held to contemplate measurement from the nearest boundaries,²⁷ and a regulation prohibiting applicable to service stations already established, has been held invalid as discriminatory.—MacRae v. City of Fayetteville, 150 S.E. 810, 198 N.C. 61.—Burden v. Town of Ahoskie, 150 S.E. 808, 198 N.C. 92.

Near school

An ordinance prohibiting the erection or maintenance of a gasoline filling station within a certain distance of school property has been held not to be discriminatory.—State v. Moye, 156 S.E. 130, 200 N.C. 11, appeal dismissed Moye v. State of North Carolina, 51 S.Ct. 653, 283 U.S. 810, 75 L.Ed. 1428.

In residential districts

An ordinance making it unlawful to operate a filling station in a residential district has been held not to be invalid as discriminatory.—Town of Wake Forest v. Medlin, 154 S.E. 29, 199 N.C. 83.

In business district

Ordinance preserving business area from intrusion of filling stations has been held not to be discriminatory because filling stations exist near restricted territory.—Mayor and Council of Pocomoke City v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, 159 A. 902, 162 Md. 368.

19. Va.—City of Alexandria v. Texas Co., 1 S.E.2d 296, 172 Va. 209. 42 C.J. p 1306 note 9.

Straight-line measurements

Under ordinance providing that no part of filling station shall be within specified distance of lot line of plot on which is located certain buildings, restricted area is measurable by a straight line from one point to the other but not by line running along nearest sidewalk route between the two points, in absence of a clear expression to the contrary.—Vine v. Board of Adjustment of Village of Ridgewood, 56 A.2d 122, 136 N.J. Law 416.

An "entrance" within the meaning of an ordinance prohibiting a filling station within a specified distance from "any entrance" to certain buildings or grounds has been held not to be limited to front entrances, but to include side and rear entrances as well, but the entrance must be such as to afford a means of ingress accessible to anybody desiring to pass from the street or other point outside the building or grounds into the latter by a well-defined existing route.—In re White, 180 N.E. 873, 95 Ind. App. 579.

a filling or service station within a specified distance of property on which there is a building used for a church prohibits the construction of such a station within such distance of a building, any part of which is regularly and exclusively used for religious services.²⁸

Retrospective effect. In general, unless it clearly appears from the terms of an ordinance or regulation restricting the erection or maintenance of filling and service stations that it is intended to relate to existing structures, it will be construed to operate prospectively only, where to do otherwise would materially change existing rights.²⁹ The erection of a new filling station in the place of an old one after demolition of the latter has been held not subject to the provisions of restrictive regulations which were not applicable to the station replaced because they took effect after its construction.³⁰

Offenses. The violation of municipal regulations and restrictions with respect to gasoline filling stations is sometimes made a criminal offense.³¹ On finding a person guilty of violating such ordinance, it is the duty of the trial court to fix the fine or punishment within the limits fixed by the ordinance.³²

Restraining violation of regulation. The fact that an ordinance regulating or restricting gasoline filling stations fixes a penalty for violations does not deprive a court of equity of jurisdiction to issue an injunction to enjoin the prohibited conduct.³³ It has been held, however, that equity will not restrain the violation of an ordinance regulating filling stations unless the act which constitutes the violation is a nuisance or operates to cause an irreparable injury to property or rights of a pecuniary nature.³⁴

§ 776. — Permit or License

- a. In general
- b. Procurement, requisites, and operation and effect
- c. Remedies of persons adversely affected by grant or refusal

a. In General

Statutes and ordinances frequently require a municipal permit or license in order to construct or operate a gasoline filling station, and such requirement has been held to be within the powers of cities or towns; but the power to impose a license fee as a tax must rest on the municipality's taxing powers and not its regulatory powers.

In the absence of a statute or ordinance otherwise providing, no municipal permit or license is required in order to construct or operate a gasoline filling station,³⁵ but, where an ordinance so provides, such a permit or license is necessary.³⁶ The requirement of a permit or license has been

Ordinance held properly enacted

N.J.—Mills v. Mosher, 27 A.2d 194, 128 N.J.Law 546.

In Connecticut

The statutes provide in substance that any person desiring to obtain a license to sell gasoline from the state commissioner of motor vehicles must first obtain and present to the commissioner a certificate of approval of the location for which such license is desired from a specified local authority, which in New Haven is not the zoning commission and board of appeals, the general statute designating such board as the proper local authority not being ap-held to be within general police or welfare powers of cities or towns, or other more specific powers vested in cities or towns by their charters or statutes.³⁷ The power to license is not, however, a power to tax,³⁸ and a license fee imposed for the purpose of raising general revenue cannot be sustained under a municipality's regulatory or police powers,³⁹ but is valid if, and only if, the municipality possesses the requisite taxing power.⁴⁰ In this connection a reasonable license fee is not a tax;⁴¹ but, according to the judicial decisions on pplicable to New Haven.—Connecticut Baptist Convention v. Murphy, 22 A. 2d 13, 128 Conn. 261.

Effect of other licensing ordinances

The power of a city to enact an ordinance requiring gasoline filling stations to obtain a license or permit does not depend on the absence of other licensing ordinances which cover a different ground, such as ordinances requiring the payment of inspection fees for washing racks, steam boilers, air pumps, and electric signs maintained by a filling station.—Fligelman v. City of Chicago, 180 N.E. 797, 348 Ill. 294.

39. Ala.—Hawkins v. City of Prichard, 80 So.2d 659, 249 Ala. 234.

Occupation tax

A municipality having power to license gasoline filling stations cannot by virtue of such power impose an occupation tax on gasoline filling stations for the purpose of raising revenue.—McKay v. City of Wichita, 11 P.2d 733, 135 Kan. 678.

Regulatory ordinances

(1) Licensing ordinance, requiring observance of wide variety of details in conducting filling station and two inspections annually has been held not invalid as containing no regulatory provisions except for preliminary inspection.—Fligelman v. City of Chicago, 180 N.E. 797, 348 Ill. 294.

(2) City ordinance levying annual license tax against gasoline filling stations making use of sidewalks as means of ingress or egress has been held within police power of city and not invalid as attempt to levy tax against property owner for exercise of right of ingress and egress to property.—City of Fort Worth v. Gulf Refining Co., Com.App., 55 S.W.2d 792, reversed on other grounds City of Fort Worth v. Gulf Refining Co., 83 S.W.2d 610, 125 Tex. 512.

(3) In determining whether an ordinance imposing a license fee is a regulatory measure or a tax, such ordinance should be considered together with regulatory ordinances in pari materia.—City of Fort Worth v. Gulf Refining Co., 83 S.W.2d 610, 125 Tex. 512.

40. Colo.—Hollenbeck v. City and County of Denver, 49 P.2d 435, 97 Colo. 370.—City of Idaho Springs v. Coleman, 30 P.2d 861, 94 Colo. 418.

Power of municipality to impose license tax on sale or storage of gasoline see Licenses § 30 d (3) (b).

Occupation tax

A municipality having the requisite power may impose an occupation tax on gasoline filling stations and a license tax on each discharge standard used by the operator of a gasoline filling station has been held to be an occupation tax and not a tax on the implements used in the conduct of a mercantile business.—McKenney v. City Council of Alexandria, 136 S.E. 588, 147 Va. 157.

State preemption of field

(1) Where the state has already imposed an excise or occupational tax on the owners of gasoline filling stations, it has been held that a municipality cannot impose a like tax, and a state gasoline tax is an excise or occupational tax within this rule.—City of Cincinnati v. Cincinnati Oil Works Co., 175 N.E. 699, 123 Ohio St. 448.

(2) So, state gasoline tax statute providing that the tax levied is in lieu, place, or stead and covers the field, of any excise, privilege, or occupational tax on the business of selling or distributing motor vehicle fuel and that no city shall invade such field of taxation and levy or collect any excise tax on, or measured by the sale, receipt, distribution, or use of, motor vehicle fuel has been held to preclude a municipality within the state from imposing a gasoline station license fee, such license fee being an "excise" under the generally accepted definition of the term, and an ordinance imposing such fee is void.—Vinup v. City of Seattle, 120 P.2d 464, 11 Wash.2d 630.

(3) Where a municipality has the power to levy an occupational tax on gasoline filling stations only if the state has not already imposed such taxes, it has been held that an annual state corporation franchise tax constitutes an entry by the state into the field of occupational taxation of domestic corporations, precluding a municipal occupational tax on the operation of gasoline filling stations as applied to domestic corporations operating filling stations within the municipality.—Cincinnati Oil Works Co. v. City of Cincinnati, 177 N.E. 768, 40 Ohio App. 8, affirmed City of Cincinnati v. Cincinnati Oil Works Co., 175 N.E. 699, 123 Ohio St. 448.

Stations within and outside city

(1) Under constitutional and statutory provisions in effect so providing, filling stations in a city are subject to a license fee to cover general purposes, but filling stations not in the city but in the police jurisdiction are not subject to license fee for general revenue.—Hawkins v. City of Prichard, 80 So.2d 659, 249 Ala. 234.

(2) Where statute provided that police jurisdiction of certain cities should cover territory within three miles of their corporate limits, levy by city of privilege tax for operation of filling stations within its police jurisdiction precluded another city from subsequently collecting similar tax from same filling stations which were also located within its three-mile limit, since police jurisdiction of two cities could not cover same area.—City of Homewood v. Woford Oil Co., 169 So. 288, 282 Ala. 634.

In determining the validity of an ordinance imposing a license fee, when challenged on the ground of the municipality's lack of power to impose a tax, the presumption is that the city authorities intended to adopt a valid ordinance and the amount of the license fee imposed will be considered prima facie reasonable,⁴³ and the persons attacking the license tax imposed have the burden of proving that the exaction bears no reasonable relationship to the duties to be performed by the city and its officers with reference to the gasoline filling station business.⁴⁴ In determining the reasonableness of the amount of the fee, it is proper to consider the cost of inspection and regulation of gasoline filling stations,⁴⁵ and the expense of municipal supervision includes services of the police and fire departments, including standby facilities, sanitary inspectors, and such other employees as may be necessary to see that reasonable requirements with respect to such businesses are observed.⁴⁶

Where the requisite power to enact ordinances requiring a permit or license to construct or operate a gasoline filling station exists, it must be exercised reasonably,⁴⁷ without unreasonable discrimination,⁴⁸ and in such manner as not to subject the owner to double taxation in the objectionable or prohibited sense.⁴⁹ Although an ordinance vesting unlimited discretion in the municipal authorities to grant or refuse a permit or license has been held to be valid,⁵⁰ it has also been held that arbitrary power cannot be conferred to allow a filling station at one place and disallow it at another, without any definite or uniform rule applicable to all alike,⁵¹ and an ordinance purporting to grant such authority is void.⁵² However, the mere fact that an ordinance does not expressly prescribe any definite standards to guide the licensing authority's discretion has been held not to leave it open to the arbitrary discretion of the licensing authority to grant or refuse a permit on any grounds which occur to it;⁵³ but such an ordinance

48. Tax different from that on merchants

Determination of whether owner of gasoline filling station may be licensed separately from merchants depends on distinction warranting separate classification, and it has been held that such distinction exists, so that ordinance imposing license tax on gasoline filling station different from that imposed on merchants is not invalid as unreasonably discriminatory.—McKenney v. City Council of Alexandria, 136 S.E. 588, 147 Va. 157.

License tax exempting garages

An ordinance imposing license tax on gasoline filling stations and exempting gasoline dispensers in connection with garages has been held to be valid as based on reasonable classification and as affecting each class alike.—Hollenbeck v. City and County of Denver, 49 P.2d 435, 97 Colo. 370.

Failure to take into consideration the volume and location of the business has been held not to render objectionable an occupation tax on all persons engaged in the operation of a filling station.—McKenney v. City Council of Alexandria, 136 S.E. 588, 147 Va. 157.

will be construed as imposing on the licensing authority the duty to consider and exercise a sound discretion with reference to those matters which have made the gasoline filling station business a proper subject of special legislation, and, therefore, as valid.⁵⁴ It follows that an ordinance which, while vesting a measure of discretion in the licensing authority, prescribes a sufficient test or standard for such authority's guidance is valid.⁵⁵ Thus, an ordinance forbidding the granting of a permit or license for a station if in the opinion of the proper authorities the location, plans, and specifications do not conform to valid legal requirements therefor,⁵⁶ or forbidding the granting of a permit or license for such a station in any location where, by reason of traffic conditions or fire hazards, it would imperil the public safety,⁵⁷ or authorizing the denial thereof if the safety, health, comfort, convenience, order, or good government of the municipality would be adversely affected,⁵⁸ has been held to be valid, and not to leave the grant or refusal of the permit to the arbitrary will of the municipal officials charged with the issuance thereof.⁵⁹

Land beyond municipal control. If the land on which it is proposed to erect a filling station is beyond the control of the municipality, the municipality cannot require a permit for the erection of a filling station thereon.⁶⁰

Criminal prosecution for failure to pay license tax. Failure to pay a license tax imposed on gasoline filling stations or gasoline dispensers is sometimes made a criminal offense,⁶¹ and rules of practice and procedure governing criminal prosecutions generally have been applied in prosecutions for such offense.⁶² A filling station operator who, through ignorance or mistake in law, does not avail himself of a remedy by appeal from a judgment adverse to him in a criminal prosecution has been held not entitled to relief in equity.⁶³

Granting of permits to others

(1) The mere fact that a filling station is permitted within a short distance of a site upon which permission to construct another station is denied has been held not to indicate discrimination—Standard Oil Co. v. Minneapolis, 204 N.W. 165, 163 Minn. 418.

(2) However, the granting of permits to others has been held to be material on the question whether the municipal authorities unfairly discriminated in refusing a permit.—City of Austin v. Nelson, Tex.Civ. App., 45 S.W.2d 692—City of Austin v. Deats, Tex.Civ.App., 32 S.W.2d 685, rehearing denied 34 S.W.2d 917.

(3) There must be some substantial difference to justify granting a permit to one person and refusing it to another, and the fact that the streets at the location where a permit is refused approach each other irregularly and the fact that the ground slopes slightly has been held not to afford a basis for distinction or classification.—City of Austin v. Nelson, supra.

Disqualification of councilman through interest

A councilman who without permit erected a station and thereafter leased it to another and moved the council for issuance of permit was incompetent to vote for the motion, and permit granted was invalid where without such councilman's vote majority of elected members to council did not vote for issuance of the permit.—Van Hovenberg v. Holman, 144 S.W.2d 718, 201 Ark. 370.

Prevention of fraud

Whether the fraudulent practices of applicant may form the basis of the discretion of the dispensing body depends on whether it can be said that the ordinance was adopted for the purpose of preventing fraud, and that the discretion of the dispensing body goes to the extent of inquiring into the honesty and good faith of applicant in his business dealings with his patrons, and the mere fact that an ordinance prohibits the transfer of a license is insufficient by itself to justify the dispensing body's investigation of the character and business integrity of applicant—State v. Common Council of City of Racine, 230 N.W. 70, 201 Wis. 435.

Absolute duty to issue

City's duty to grant license for gasoline filling station is absolute whenever applicant complies with provisions of ordinance—State v. City of North Platte, 233 N.W. 4, 120 Neb. 413.

Prohibited location

A permit to construct a filling station at a location prohibited by a valid ordinance is illegal.—City of San Antonio v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., Tex.Civ.App., 27 S.W.2d 868, error dismissed.

Order of Office of Production Management

City officials could not refuse filling station construction permit because order of Office of Production Management prohibited building of filling stations unless construction was begun prior to effective date of the order since alleged failure to comply with order was a matter between Office of Production Management and builder—Short v. The fact that the proposed station will not promote the general welfare is immaterial on an application for a permit, the controlling question being whether or not it will adversely affect the general welfare.—Benner v. Tribbitt, Md., 57 A.2d 346.

ment, if entered into, is not binding on the property owner.⁷²

While it is proper to deny a permit where the filling station would constitute a nuisance,⁷³ it is unnecessary to sustain a denial of a permit to show that the filling station would constitute a nuisance.⁷⁴ In passing on an application, the municipal authorities may consider the effect on traffic,⁷⁵ but they are not limited thereto,⁷⁶ and may also consider the fact that the fire hazard involved in the storage and dispensing of oil and gasoline is high.⁷⁷ It has been held that a permit to erect a filling station may be refused because persons using it would be required to drive over the sidewalks thereby adding to the peril of pedestrians.⁷⁸ However, it has also been held that this may not be done without affording applicant just and adequate compensation for the loss of his constitutional right to have reasonable means of access and egress for motor vehicles over the sidewalks.⁷⁹ The municipal authorities are not required to call witnesses to establish facts which they already know.⁸⁰

Form of application. The application for a permit to construct a filling station should be in the form prescribed therefor by ordinance,⁸¹ but, where the application is denied on substantive grounds, the fact that it was not made in the proper form is immaterial.⁸²

Operation and effect. A grant by a municipality of permission to construct and maintain a gasoline filling station carries with it the right to perform all acts necessarily implied from the privilege conferred,⁸³ and includes the right to use the sidewalks for ingress to, and egress from, the station.⁸⁴ Such grant or a grant of permission to install gasoline storage tanks is not, however, a grant of the right to be free from competition therein,⁸⁵ especially where the grant is temporary and is revocable at the discretion of the city council.⁸⁶ The approval of a gasoline filling station

In New Jersey

(1) The view has been taken that filling stations by themselves do not involve such an increase in the fire hazard as to justify the refusal of a permit on that ground alone.—Meslar v. Township Committee of Denville Tp., 186 A. 55, 14 N.J.Misc. 497—Finkel v. Kaltenbach, 132 A. 197, 4 N.J.Misc. 135—Williams v. Gage, 130 A. 721, 3 N.J.Misc. 1095—Sarg v. Hooper, 128 A. 393, 3 N.J.Misc. 335, affirmed 130 A. 721, 102 N.J.Law 218.

(2) However, in a case where there were other grounds justifying a refusal of the permit, the increased fire hazard resulting from the storage of a large amount of gasoline in a neighborhood where there were a great number of tenement houses and factories was considered an additional circumstance warranting refusal of a permit.—Hall v. Mayor and Aldermen of Jersey City, 142 A. 344, 6 N.J.Misc. 558.

City has right to regulate amount of sidewalk space to be used for ingress to, and egress from, a proposed filling station, but existence of such right did not authorize municipal authorities to refuse to grant a permit for construction of station where use of streets and sidewalks for passageways would not amount to an actual occupancy and obstruction of streets and sidewalks.—Buffington v. Crowe, 15 S.E.2d 811, 65 Ga.App. 417.

Custom of disregarding

Although no formal application for permit to erect filling station was made as required by ordinance, where evidence showed that permits were granted in most cases without formal application, official was justified in issuing permit.—Edwards v. City of Hammond, La.App., 4 So.2d 97.

Quantity of gasoline allowed to be stored

Where the consent to the installation and operation of the filling station also contained a consent to the use of the street and alley adjoining the proposed site for the purpose of piping gasoline from tank cars on a nearby railroad siding, the latter fact was held to contemplate quantity transfers, and gave licensee privilege of keeping more than the small quantity of gasoline permitted to be kept under a general ordinance without municipal consent, even though the permit granted did not specifically mention the quantity of gasoline allowed to be stored.—Phillips v. Aillingham, 33 P.2d 910, 38 N. M. 361.

permit by municipal authorities has been held to be a recognition of its propriety, precluding a subsequent assertion that a state official had no authority to waive regulations prohibiting a station at the particular location.⁸⁷

(2) Consent of Adjoining Property Owners

An ordinance requiring the owners of a specified per cent of property within a certain distance of the proposed location of a filling or service station to consent to the erection or maintenance of such a station as a prerequisite to the issuance of a license or permit therefor has been held to be proper.

A municipal ordinance requiring the owners of a specified per cent of the property within a certain distance of the proposed location of a filling or service station to consent to the erection or maintenance of such station as a prerequisite to the issuance of a license or permit therefor has been held to be proper,⁸⁸ although the delegation of such power to adjoining landowners, where not specifically conferred by the legislature or subsequently ratified by it, has been criticized.⁸⁹ Such ordinances, in order to be valid, must be reasonable and not arbitrary or oppressive,⁹⁰ and an ordinance basing the consent on the number of buildings within the area regardless of their character or size, or the size of the lot on which they are located, has been held to be invalid as unfair and unreasonable,⁹¹ as has an ordinance under which the owner of a very few feet of frontage would possess the absolute power to prevent the erection of a filling station, even though the entire neighborhood, except him, might consent.⁹² Where the required consents are not obtained the permit is properly refused,⁹³ and a permit granted without the required consents has been held to be invalid.⁹⁴

In computing distances under such an ordinance, it has been held that the boundary lines of the lot on which the filling station is to be erected,⁹⁵ and not the location of the storage tanks thereon,⁹⁶ constitute the proper basis for measurement. In computing frontage of adjacent property under such an ordinance, the total frontage of a lot which abuts upon two or more streets should be included, and not merely the frontage along one street.⁹⁷

Power to confer privilege

An ordinance prohibiting the erection of a filling station in a certain locality without the consent of a specified number of the adjoining property owners does not authorize the adjoining owners to curtail any right of a person seeking to make use of his property for a filling station, but merely gives them the power to bestow on him a privilege which he does not otherwise enjoy.—City of Muskogee v. Morton, 261 P. 183, 128 Okl. 17.

In residential district

City ordinance prohibiting installation of gasoline filling stations without consent of property owners within certain radius was valid exercise of police power as to person seeking to locate filling station in residence district.—State ex rel. Ordinance unreasonable as applied

Where it appeared that the land on which a gasoline station was proposed to be built was within a business district and was practically surrounded by public garages, automobile salesrooms, and other gasoline stations, and that one of owners of another gasoline station gave as his reason for refusing to give his consent the fact that it would be detrimental to his business, it was held that an ordinance requiring the consent of adjacent owners, as applied to the facts of the case at bar, was arbitrary, unreasonable, and void.—Koo v. Saunders, supra.

91. Ill.—People v. Andrews, 171 N.E. 137, 339 Ill. 157.

92. Ordinance construed

An ordinance requiring the owner of a corner lot, before a permit will issue, to present to the issuing official the written consent of the owners of sixty per cent of all frontage extending four hundred feet from and along both sides of each street intersecting at said corner and the full consent of the owners of the seventy-five feet of frontage immediately adjoining on either side has been held to allow the owner of one, two, or a very few feet of frontage absolute power to prevent the erection of a filling station, and, in the absence of a statute or other ordinance absolutely prohibiting the erection of a filling station in the area, such ordinance has been held to be invalid.—Smith v. Barrett, 20 P.2d 864, 81 Utah 522.

Division of lot

(1) Under an ordinance making it unlawful to install a gasoline tank without obtaining the consent of a certain per cent of the property owners within a specified distance of the "lot or plot of ground" in question, it has been held that a lot owner applying for a permit cannot designate such small portion of his holdings as he chooses, it being more reasonable to assume that, when the municipal legislature used the term "plot," it meant to designate a ground area which might be larger than ordinary single platted lots rather than that it intended to refer to a mere small portion of a single lot.—Jennings v. Calumet National Bank, supra.

(2) However, with reference to such ordinance it has been stated that "there appears to be no reason preventing the owner of a lot from dividing it as he sees fit."—Continental Illinois Bank & Trust Co. v. Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, 257 Ill. App. 425, 429.

Consent by corporation. Where one of the adjacent owners is a corporation, its consent must be granted by an officer or agent of the corporation who is authorized to do so.⁹⁸ It has been held that a foreign corporation admitted to do business within the state and having the same interest in adjacent property as other owners has the same right as other owners to grant its consent.⁹⁹

(3) Revocation

A gasoline filling station permit is subject to revocation by the proper exercise of the police power vested in the municipality, but such power must be exercised in a lawful manner, and should not be exercised arbitrarily or without good legal cause.

A permit obtained from a municipality to install gasoline tanks and pumps and to erect a gasoline filling station is subject to revocation by the proper exercise of the police power vested in the municipality.¹ The power of revocation must be exercised in a lawful manner,² and should not be exercised without notice or an opportunity to be heard,³ nor should it be exercised arbitrarily or without good and sufficient cause in law.⁴ In the absence of concealment of material facts, or material misrepresentations, or fraud,⁵ it has been held that a municipality may not revoke or cancel a license or permit to erect or maintain a filling station after the permit has been accepted and money has been expended or obligations incurred in reliance thereon.⁶ Municipal authorities have been held to be precluded from asserting grounds for the revocation of the permit other than those asserted in the revocation itself.⁷ Where a permit or license has been improperly revoked the permittee or licensee is entitled to have it reinstated.⁸

Any person aggrieved by the decision of a municipal body or officer on an application for a permit for the construction of a gasoline filling station may obtain a judicial review of the decision by a court of competent jurisdiction, but such review is merely a process to determine whether the body or official has acted beyond its or his statutory powers or jurisdiction, or has acted arbitrarily, or so unreasonably as to constitute an abuse of discretion.

Any person aggrieved by the decision of a municipal body or officer on an application for a permit for the construction of a gasoline filling station may, sometimes by virtue of express statutory provisions, obtain a judicial review of the decision by a court of competent jurisdiction,⁹ certiorari being an appropriate common-law remedy.¹⁰ Such appeal or review has been held not to be governed by the ordinary rules governing appeals in judicial proceedings.¹¹ It does not involve a transfer of

11. Jurisdictional amendment

Parties

In absence of controlling statutory or charter provision, proper procedure in bringing appeal from decision of public officer charged with duty of determining whether proposed location of gasoline filling station is a proper one is a citation to the officer as such to appear and answer the complaint, and other persons having direct interest adverse to interest of jurisdiction from the administrative body or official to a court,¹² and does not require the court on appeal to try the case de novo, for the purpose of determining whether it shall substitute its findings and conclusions for those of the administrative body or official,¹³ but is merely a process to determine whether the body or official has acted beyond its or his statutory powers or jurisdiction, or has acted arbitrarily, as without notice and due hearing, or so unreasonably as to constitute an abuse of discretion.¹⁴ In order to make such determination, the court must necessarily hear the relevant and material facts under the application and the pleadings thereto, except in so far as the determination may be aided by presumptions.¹⁵ The presumption is that the municipal authorities acted reasonably and not arbitrarily,¹⁶ and neither the findings of fact made by the municipal authorities¹⁷ nor the decision granting or refusing the permit¹⁸ will be disturbed by the courts unless manifestly wrong. However, the presumption of regularity does not persist after it appears that the discretion of the municipal authorities was influenced by a consideration of matters concerning which no discretion was lodged with the licensing authorities.¹⁹ In a common-law proceeding in certiorari, the reviewing court cannot order that a license or permit be issued,²⁰ but can merely quash the action taken by the licensing authorities if it finds error of law therein.²¹

Recovery of license money paid. An action for money had and received is an appropriate remedy to recover money paid for a license of a gasoline filling station under a mistake of law or fact on an illegal assessment made under color of a municipal ordinance,²² and, under a statute so providing, the fact that such payment was not made under protest or compulsion is immaterial.²³ Rules governing the trial of civil actions generally apply in such action.²⁴

Adjoining property owners' right to injunctive relief. Where the requisite consents are not obtained, under a municipal ordinance requiring the owners of a specified per cent of the property within a certain distance of the station to consent to its erection or maintenance as a prerequisite to the issue of a license or permit therefor, as discussed supra subsection b (2) of this section, in a proper case a property owner within the prescribed area may obtain injunctive relief.²⁵

Damages arising from invalid ordinance. A municipal legislative body cannot be held liable in damages for enacting or enforcing an invalid ordinance requiring a permit for the construction or operation of a gasoline filling station.²⁶

invitees the duty of exercising reasonable care for their safety, but his only obligation to trespassers or licensees is to abstain from the infliction of an intentional, wanton, or willful injury. The operator of a filling station is responsible for the negligent acts of his agent or servant acting within the scope of his employment proximately causing an injury.

While the operator of a filling station is not an insurer of the safety of persons using the premises,²⁷ he owes to invitees, or persons expressly or impliedly invited to use the premises,²⁸ the duty of exercising reasonable or ordinary care for their safety,²⁹ and to keep the premises in a reasonably safe condition³⁰ for use according to the invitation,³¹ or at least to warn them against any dangers attendant on this use which are not known to them or not obvious to any ordinarily intelligent person and which either were known, or, in the exercise of reasonable care, ought to have been known, to the operator of the station,³² and the filling station operator is liable for injuries which are the natural and probable consequences of his negligence.³³ The invitee, in turn, has a corresponding duty to exercise reasonable or ordinary care for his own safety.³⁴

The duty which the operator of a filling station owes to invitees does not extend to trespassers or licensees.³⁵ He owes no duty to a trespasser to maintain the property in a safe condition,³⁶ his only obligation to a trespasser being to abstain from the infliction of an intentional, wanton, or willful injury,³⁷ and not to maintain some hidden engine of destruction.³⁸ In this respect, the duty owed to a licensee is no greater than that owed to a trespasser.³⁹

As to persons not on his premises, that is, persons who are neither invitees, licensees, or trespassers, but simply members of the general public, such as pedestrians using the sidewalks adjacent to the station, the operator owes them the duty of exercising reasonable care for their safety.⁴⁰

Station closed

(1) A person entering a gasoline station when it is closed has been held to be a trespasser, and not an invitee, notwithstanding the owner had in the past tolerated similar trespasses.—Nimetz v. Shell Oil Co., D.C.D.C., 74 F.Supp. 1.

(2) On the other hand, it has been held that the mere fact that the station is closed does not deprive a motorist entering it of the status of an invitee.—Dym v. Merit Oil Corporation, 36 A.2d 276, 130 Conn. 585.

42 C.J. p 1308 note 64.

Duty to customer in servicing vehicle. The operator of a filling station may be held liable in damages for negligence in servicing a customer's motor vehicle.⁴¹

Liability of owner or operator for acts of others. The owner or operator of a gasoline filling station is responsible for the negligent acts of his agent or servant acting within the scope of his employment proximately causing injury,⁴² but, as a general rule, the owner cannot be held liable for the negligent acts of an independent contractor.⁴³ It has been held, however, that even though the station is operated by an independent contractor, if it is operated in such manner as to constitute a nuisance, and the owner has actual or constructive notice of the manner in which it is operated, the owner may be held liable to third persons injured thereby.⁴⁴ In determining the nature of the relationship between the owner of the station and the persons operating it, a person injured is not necessarily bound by the apparent relationship created by the written instruments executed by the owner and those operating it.⁴⁵ So, even though a contract as originally entered into nominally created the relationship of employer and independent contractor, if such contract was a subterfuge,⁴⁶ or if the employer thereafter assumed and actually exercised control over the means and methods by which the work was to be performed,⁴⁷ the relationship would be that of master and servant or principal and agent and the master or principal would not be relieved of liability for the negligence of such servant or agent.

§ 778. — Actions

In actions for injuries resulting from the negligent operation or maintenance of a gasoline filling station, the general rules of practice and procedure governing the trial of civil actions are applicable.

In actions for injuries resulting from the negligent operation or maintenance of a gasoline filling station, the general rules of practice and procedure governing the trial of civil actions are applicable,⁴⁸ and this is true as to such matters as the issues, proof, and variance,⁴⁹ the burden of proof,⁵⁰ the weight and sufficiency of the evidence,⁵¹ and questions of law or fact.⁵²

(2) In an action for destruction of a motor vehicle by fire while it was being filled with gasoline, evidence that defendant permitted the nozzle of the pump to slip to the concrete floor and that immediately thereafter the fire started is sufficient to support a finding that the fire originated from a spark when the nozzle struck the floor, and that defendant was negligent in permitting it to slip.—Morris v. Texas Co., R.I., 115 A. 643.

Evidence held insufficient

(1) Mere fact that while vehicle was being served with gasoline some of liquid ran upon motor and ignited has been held insufficient to show negligence on part of operator of gasoline pump.—Pinter v. Wenzel, 180 N.W. 120, 173 Wis. 84.

(2) Fact that merchandise advertised under trade name of owner of land on which filling station was built was sold at retail on the property was not alone sufficient to establish agency as between owner of realty and tenant who operated station thereon so as to render owner liable for tortious acts of station attendant.—Greiving v. La Plante, 131 P.2d 898, 156 Kan. 196.

52. Leaving parked car in gear held not negligence as a matter of law.—Kaysor v. Jungbauer, 14 N.W.2d 337, 217 Minn. 140.

MULTIPLE. Manifold; having many parts or relations.⁵⁷ As an electrical term see Electricity § 1 b.

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.⁵⁸

MULTIPLEX; MULTIPLICATA. As the first words of maxims as to which there have been no recent applications see 42 C.J. p 1412 notes 87, 88.

MULTIPLICITY. A state of being many.⁵⁹ "Multiplicity" has been distinguished from "multitude."⁶⁰

Multiplicity of actions or suits occurs where there are numerous and unnecessary attempts to litigate the same right, and where several different suits or actions are brought on the same issue.⁶¹ This subject is treated in Actions §§ 102 c, 108, 110, and in Equity § 42. See also the title index to Equity and consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

MULTITUDE. An assemblage of many people.⁶² It has been held that three or more persons constitute a multitude.⁶³

"Multitude" has been distinguished from "multiplicity" see ante note 60.

MULTITUDINEM; MULTITUDO; MULTO. As the first words of maxims as to which there have been no recent applications see 42 C.J. p 1413 notes 98-2.

MULUS. A Latin word meaning mule.⁶⁴

MUM. The term is defined as meaning silent; not speaking; and it is commonly so understood.⁶⁵

MUNGO. The waste produced in a woolen mill from hard-spun or felted cloth and used in connection with wool, cotton, or better grades of waste in the manufacture of back-yarns or cheap cloth.⁶⁶

MUNICIPAL. An adjective,⁶⁷ derived from the Latin "municipalis"⁶⁸ or "municipium,"⁶⁹ the meaning of these terms being discussed in Municipal Corporations § 2.

The word "municipal" is variously defined as, belonging to a city, town, or place having the right of local government;⁷⁰ belonging to or affecting a particular state or separate community;⁷¹ pertaining to a city or a community within a state, possessing rights of self-government;⁷² of or pertaining to a city or corporation having the right of administering local government;⁷³ pertaining to a municipality;⁷⁴ pertaining to corporate or local self-government;⁷⁵ pertaining to local self-government;⁷⁶ self-governing;⁷⁷ that which belongs to a corporation or a city.⁷⁸

While the term "municipal" is frequently used in referring to a self-governing city or town and in this sense is defined in Municipal Corporations § 1, it is not always used in the limited sense of applying to cities, towns, or villages.⁷⁹ It has a broader meaning,⁸⁰ a more extensive or extended meaning.⁸¹

Its application has been extended to include the internal government of the state;⁸² and it is in legal effect the same as public or governmental as distinguished from private.⁸³ It is sometimes construed as intending to distinguish public political bodies from corporations of a quasi-public nature.⁸⁴ It may also mean independent; local; particular.⁸⁵

The word "municipal" has been used as the equivalent of "governmental" see 38 C.J.S. p 969 note 77, and has been used in contradistinction to "international" see 47 C.J.S. p 1275 note 2. "Municipal" has been compared with, or distinguished from, the terms "municipal corporation," and "municipality" see Municipal Corporations § 1.

Municipal purpose. It has been said that the term "municipal purpose" is without any technical import.⁸⁶ It is defined as a public or governmental purpose, as distinguished from a private purpose;⁸⁷ a purpose intended to embrace some of the functions of government, local or general.⁸⁸
